THE

ODYSSEY

OF

HOMER,

TRANSLATED INTO

ENGLISH BLANK VERSE

BY THE LATE

WILLIAM COWPER, Esq.

The Second Edition,
With copious Alterations and Notes,

PREPARED FOR THE PRESS BY THE TRANSLATOR,

AND NOW PUBLISHED WITH A PREFACE

BY HIS KINSMAN,

J. JOHNSON, LL.B.

CHAPLAIN TO THE BISHOP OF PETERBOROUGH.

Τάδε δ' αἰτί πάρος ἑμοια, διὰ δὲ τῶν αὐτῶν ἐζῆ.—ΕΠΙΧΑΡΜΟΣ.

VOL. I.

LONDON:

PRINTED

FOR J. JOHNSON, ST. PAUL'S CHURCH YARD,

BY BUNNEY AND GOLD, SHOE LANE.

1802.
TO THE

RIGHT HONOURABLE

COUNTESS DOWAGER SPENCER,

THE FOLLOWING

TRANSLATION OF THE ODYSSEY,

A POEM THAT EXHIBITS,

IN THE CHARACTER OF ITS HEROINE,

AN EXAMPLE

OF ALL DOMESTIC VIRTUE,

IS WITH EQUAL PROPRIETY AND RESPECT

INSCRIBED

BY HER LADYSHIP'S

MOST DEVOTED SERVANT,

THE AUTHOR.
THE ODYSSEY OF HOMER.

TRANSLATED INTO

ENGLISH BLANK VERSE.
ARGUMENT

OF THE

FIRST BOOK.

In a Council of the Gods, Minerva calls their attention to Ulysses, still a wanderer. They resolve to grant him a safe return to Ithaca. Minerva descends to encourage Telemachus, and in the form of Mentes directs him in what manner to proceed. Throughout this book the extravagance and profligacy of the suitors are occasionally suggested.
Muse make the man thy theme, for shrewdness famed
And genius versatile; who far and wide
A Wand'rer, after Ilium overthrown,
Discover'd various cities, and the mind
And manners learn'd of men in lands remote.
He num'rous woes, on Ocean toss'd, endured,
Anxious to save himself, and to conduct
His followers to their home; yet all his care
Preserved them not; they perish'd self-destroy'd
By their own fault; infatuate! who devoured
The oxen of the all-o'erseeing Sun,
And, punish'd for that crime, return'd no more.
Daughter divine of Jove, these things record,
As it may please thee, even in our ears.

The rest, all those who had perdition escap'd
By war or on the Deep, dwelt now at home;
Him only, of his country and his wise
Alike desirous, in her hollow grot

Calypso,
Calypso, beauteous Goddess, still detained
Wooing him to her arms; and, when at length,
Year rolling after year, the season came
That should restore him, by the will of heav’n,
To his loved Ithaca, (nor even there, Friends only should he meet, but many a foe)
Then all the Pow’rs above with pity view’d
His num’rous toils, save Neptune; He alone,
With ceaseless rage pursuing him, withheld
Godlike Ulysses from his native shores.
But Neptune, now, the Æthiopians fought,
(The Æthiopians, utmost of mankind,
These Eastward situate, those toward the West)
Call’d to an hecatomb of bulls and lambs*.
There sitting, pleas’d he banquetted; the Gods
In Jove’s abode, mean-time, assembled all, ‘Midst whom the Sire of heav’n and earth began.
For he recall’d to mind Ægisthus slain
By Agamemnon’s celebrated son
Orestes, and retracing in his thought
That dread event, the Immortals thus address’d.

How rash are Human-kind! who charge on Us

* The Æthiopians, according to Diodorus Sic., are said to have been the first of the human race who celebrated the worship of the Gods, from whom they received, in recompense of their devotions, an immunity from conquest by the Kings their neighbours.
Their suff'ring, far more truly the result
Of their own folly, than of our decrees.*
So now Ægïsthus, under no constraint
Of Destiny, hath ta'en Atrides' wife
To his own bed, and him at his return
Hath foully slain, though not unwarn'd by Us
That he would surely perish; for we sent
The watchful Argicide, who bade him fear
Alike, to slay the King, or woo the Queen;
For that Atrides' son Orestes, soon
As grown mature, and eager to assume
The sway in Argos, should avenge the deed.
So Hermes spake, but his advice moved not Ægïsthus, on whose head the whole arrear
Of vengeance heap'd, at last, hath therefore fall'n†.
To whom Minerva, Goddess azure-eyed.
Oh Jove, Saturnian Sire, o'er all Supreme!

* Chryfippus, as quoted by Gellius, inveighs with much reasonable indignation against those profligate and audacious persons, who, to excuse a slavish obedience to their lusts, have recourse to the plea of Fatality, ascribing all their wickedness, not to their own impious rashness, the proper and true source of it, but to the will of heaven.—Homer however, as he observes, the wisest as well as the most antient of the poets, was the first also to censurate this egregious folly.—C.

† Argus, the son of Arestor, was called the πολυμάτας κύων or dog with many eyes, on account of the vigilance with which he guarded Io the daughter of Inachus; but Mercury, by command of Jupiter slew him, and was thence entitled the Argicide.—B:
And well he merited the death he found;
So perish all who shall, like him, offend.
But with a bosom anguish-rent I view
Ulysses, hapless Chief! who from his friends
Remote, affliction hath long time endured
In yonder wood-land isle, the central bosc
Of Ocean. That retreat a Goddess holds,
Daughter of sapient Atlas, who the abyss
Knows to its bottom, and the pillars high
Himself upbears which sep'rate earth from heav'n.
His daughter, there, the sorrowing Chief detains,
And ever with smooth speech insidious seeks To wean his heart from Ithaca; mean-time
Ulysses, happy might he but behold
The smoke ascending from his native land,
Death covets. Canst thou not, Olympian Jove!
At last relent? Hath not Ulysses oft
With victims slain amid Achaia's fleet
Thee gratified while yet at Troy he fought?
How, therefore, hath he thus incensed thee, Jove?
To whom the Sov'reign of the realms of air.
What words, my daughter, have escaped thy lips?
Can I forget Ulysses? Him forget
So noble, who in wisdom all mankind
Excels, and who hath sacrificed so oft
To us whose dwelling is the boundless heav'n?

Earth-
Earth-circling Neptune—He it is whose wrath
Pursues him ceaseless for the Cyclops' fain.
Whom he hath blinded, Polypheme the vail,
In strength superior to his giant kind.
For Him the sea-nymph, Phorcys' daughter, bore, Thoösa, by the Sov'reign of the waves
Impregnated in caverns of the Deep.
E'er since that day, the Shaker of the shores,
Although he slay him not, yet devious drives
Ulysses from his native isle afar.
But come—devise we, now, with one consent
His safe return, both means and prosp'rous end;
So Neptune shall his wrath remit, whose pow'r
In contest with the force of all the Gods
Exerted single, can but strive in vain.

To whom Minerva, Goddess azure-eyed.
Oh Jupiter! above all Kings enthroned!
If the Immortals ever-blessed ordain
That wise Ulysses to his home return,
Dispatch we then Hermes the Argicide,
Our messenger, to fair Ogygia's isle,
Who shall inform Calypso, nymph divine,
Of this our purpose, that Ulysses, long
A suff'r'er, seek, at length, his home again.
Myself will hence to Ithaca, mean-time,
His son to animate, and with new force Inspire him, that (the Grecians all convened In council,) he, at once, may bid depart
The suitors from his home, who, day by day,
His num'rous flocks and fatted herds consume.
And I will send him thence to Sparta forth,
And into sandy Pylus, there to hear
(If hear he may) some tidings of his Sire,
And to procure himself a glorious name.

This said, her golden sandals to her feet
She bound, ambrosial, which o'er all the earth
And o'er the moist flood waft her fleet as air;
Then, seizing her brass-pointed spear robust,
In length and bulk and weight a matchless beam,
With which the Jove-born Goddess levels ranks
Of Heroes against whom her anger burns,
From the Olympian summit down she flew
To Ithaca *, where, in the vestibule
And on the threshold of Ulysses' hall
Graping her brazen spear she flood, in form.
The hero Mentes †, hospitable Chief

* Στὶς τ' Ἰθακῆς ἐν Δήμῳ—The word Δήμος is here said by the Scholiast to be a proper name, and the name of the place in Ithaca where stood the palace of Ulysses.—B. & C. But Barnes accounts this interpretation of it an idle dream, for which reason I have not attended to it in the translation.
† We are told that Homer was under obligations to Mentes, who had frequently given him a passage in his ship to different countries which he wished to see, for which reason he has here immortalized him.
Of Taphos' isle — the found the haughty throng
The suitors; they before the palace gate
Sported with iv'ry cubes, reclined on hides
Of num'rous oxen which themselves had flain.
The heralds and the busy menials there
Minister'd to them; these their mantling cups
With water flaked; with bibulous sponges those Made clean the tables, set the banquet on,
And portion'd out to each his plenteous share.
Long ere the rest Telemachus himself
Mark'd her, for sad amid them all he sat,
Pourtraying in deep thought contemplative
His noble Sire, and questioning if yet
Perchance the Hero might return to chase
From all his palace that imperious herd,
To his own honour lord of his own home.
Thus musing there, he suddenly perceived
The Goddess, and sprang forth, for he abhor'd
To see a guest's admittance long delay'd;
Approaching eager, her right hand he seized,
The brazen spear took from her, and in words
With welcome wing'd Minerva thus address'd.
Stranger! Thou shalt be welcome; ent'ring, share
The banquet, first, then tell me thy desire.

* Taphos was one of the Echinades, islands of the Ionian sea, and was inhabited by the Telebceans.—B. & C.
So saying, toward the spacious hall he moved Follow'd by Pallas, and, arriving soon
Beneath the lofty roof, placed her bright spear
Within a pillar's cavity, long time
The armoury where many a spear had stood,
Bright weapons of his own illustrious Sire.
Then, leading her toward a footstool'd throne
Magnificent, which first he overspread
With linen, there he seated her, apart
From that rude throng, and for himself disposed
A throne of various colours at her side;
Left, flunn'd with clamour of the lawless band,
His guest should suffer pain, and that himself
Might ask him tidings of his absent Sire.
And now a maiden charg'd with golden ew'r
And with an argent laver, pouring first
Pure water on their hands, supplied them, next,
With a resplendent table, which the chaste
Directress of the household heap'd with bread
And dainties, remnants of the last regale.
Then, in his turn, the seauer* with fav'ry meats
Served them, of delicate and various kinds,
And golden cups beside the chargers placed,
Which the attendant herald fill'd with wine.

* Milton uses the word—
Sewers and seneschals.

Ere-
Erelong, in rush’d the suitors, and the thrones
And couches occupied, on all whose hands
The heralds pour’d pure water; then the maids
Attended them with bread in baskets heap’d,
And eager they assail’d the ready feast.
At length, when neither thirst nor hunger more
They felt unsatisfied, to new delights
Their thoughts they turn’d, to song and sprightly dance, Enlivening sequel of the banquet’s joys.
An herald, then, to Phemius’ hand consign’d
His beauteous lyre; he through constraint regaled
The suitors with his song, and while the chords
He struck in prelude to his pleas’dant strains, Telemachus, in accents whisper’d close
To Pallas ear, the Goddess thus address’d.

My inmate and my friend! far from my lips
Be ev’ry word that might displease thine ear!
Song and the sprightly lyre may well engage
These wanton feeders at another’s cost,
Whose bones lie weather-bleach’d, we know not where,
On foreign ground, or rolling in the Deep.
Ah! could they see him once to his own isle Restored, both gold and raiment they would with Far less, and nimbleness of foot instead.
But He, alas! hath by a wretched fate
Past question perish’d, and what news foe’er
We
We hear of his return, no comfort breeds
In us, convinced that he returns no more.
But answer undistembling; tell me true;
Who art thou? whence? where stands thy city? where Thy father's mansion? In what kind of ship
Cam'st thou? Why steer'd the mariners their course
To Ithaca, and of what land are they?
For that on foot thou found'st us not, is sure.
This also tell me, hast thou now arrived
New to our isle, or waft thou heretofore
My father's guest? Since many to our house Resorted in those happier days, for he Drew irresistibly the hearts of all.

Then thus the Goddess of the azure eyes.
I will with all simplicity of truth
Thy questions satisfy*. Behold in me
Mentes, the offspring of a Chief renown'd
In war, Anchialus; and I rule, myself,
The Taphians, mariners expert and bold.
This day we here arrived, myself and crew,
Seeking a people of another tongue

* Μὴν ἀπεισάω—Pallas promises in these emphatical words that she will tell him the truth, yet begins with a fiction. The promise therefore is understood by some to have reference only to the assurance she gives him that his father is still alive. But others interpret the words here noted as signifying no more than circumstantially.—C.
Athwart the gloomy flood, in quest of brass
For which I barter steel, ploughing the waves
'To Temes'a*. My ship beneath the woods
Of Neius, at yonder field that skirts
Your city, in the haven Rhethrus rides.

We are hereditary guests; our Sires
Were friends long since; as, when thou seest him next,
The Hero old Laertes will avouch,
Of whom, I learn, that he frequents no more
The city now, but in sequester'd scenes
Dwells sorrowful, and by an antient dame
Oft as strength fails him, while he creeps and toils
Among his vines, with food and drink supplied.

But I have come drawn hither by report Which spake thy Sire arrived, though still it seems
The adverse Gods his homeward course retard.
For not yet breathless lies the noble Chief,
But in some island of the boundless flood Resides a prisoner, by barbarous force
Of some rude race detained reluctant there.

And I will now foreshow thee what the Gods
Teach me, and what, though neither augur skill'd

* Temes'a was, according to some, a city of Cyprus, but others find it in Italy.—B. & C. Strabo observes of this last, that if in Homer's time it was famous for workers in brasses, it has since ceased, to be so.—C.

Nor
Nor prophet, I yet trust shall come to pass.
He shall not, henceforth, live an exile long
From his own shores; no, not although in bands
Of iron held, but will ere long contrive
His own return; for in expedients, framed
With wond'rous ingenuity, he abounds.
But tell me true; art thou, in stature such,
Son of himself Ulysses? for thy face
And sparkling eyes seem plainly to bespeak
Ulysses in thee; for delights like these,
With Him conversing, I have oft enjoy'd,
Ere yet, with many a gallant Greecian more
He fail'd to Troy. But never have I, since, Ulysses seen, nor hath Ulysses, me.

To whom Telemachus, discrete, replied.
Stranger! The truth is this. My mother Him
Affirms my father, and the mother's voice
That question can, alone, with truth decide*.

* Eustathius observes that the legitimacy of a birth is best known to the mother; and Aristotle is of the same opinion, who cites the case of a woman named Peparethia, whose oath in a dispute at law concerning the legitimacy of her child, was accepted as decisive.
Telemachus therefore does not mean to impeach his mother's chastity, but merely to affirm his ignorance on a point which she alone was qualified to determine.—C.

Among us the child is always given by the Law to him to whom the mother swears it.
Would I were offspring of some happier Sire,
Ordain'd in calm possession of his own
To reach the verge of life. But now, alas!
I am the rumour'd offspring of a man
Of all mankind unhappiest. Thy demand
Was simple truth; thus therefore I reply.

Then answer blue-eyed Pallas thus return'd.
From no ignoble race, in future days,
The Gods shall prove thee sprung, whom so endow'd
With ev'ry grace Penelope hath borne.
But tell me true. What festival is this?
This throng—whence are they? wherefore hast thou need
Of such a multitude? Behold I here
A banquet, or a nuptial feast? for these Meet not by contribution * to regale,
With such brutality and din they hold
Their riotous banquet! a wise man and good
Arriving, now, among them, at the fight
Of such enormities would much be wroth.

To whom replied Telemachus discrete.
Since, stranger! thou hast ask'd, learn also this.

* ἐπανος, a convivial meeting, at which every man paid his proportion, at least contributed something;—B. & C. but it seems to have been a meeting at which strict sobriety was observed, else Pallas would not have inferred from the noise and riot of this, that it was not such a one.
While yet Ulysses with his people dwelt,
His presence warranted the hope that here
Virtue should dwell and opulence; but heav'n
Hath cast for us, at length, a diff'rent lot,
And he is lost, as never man before.
For I should less lament his death itself,
Had he among his friends at Ilium fall'n,
Or in the arms of his companions died,
Troy's siege accomplish'd. Then his tomb the Greeks
Of ev'ry tribe had built, and he had won
A never-dying name for me; but now,
By harpies torn inglorious, beyond reach
Of eye or ear he lies; and hath to me
Grief only, and unceasing sighs bequeath'd.*
Nor mourn I for his sake alone; the Gods
Have planned for me still many a woe beside;
For all the rulers of the neighbour isles,
Samos, Dulichium, and the forest-crown'd

* The Harpies and their place of habitation are mentioned by Virgil.—Æn. 3. 1. 210.

The Strophades are isles of Grecian name
Amid the wide Ionian Deep, possess'd
By dire Celo no and her Harpy brood;
Nor ever, through the anger of the Gods,
Emerg'd a fouler, feller pelt from Hell.
The birds have virgin looks, but they annoy
The scent with filthie ordure; talons arm
Their hands, and famine pales their ghastly cheeks.

Zacynthus,
Zacynthus, others also, rulers here
In craggy Ithaca, my mother seek
In marriage, and my household stores consume.
But she nor will accept, nor can dismiss
Their hated suit, and They, mean-time, devour
My substance, who, myself, must perish soon.

To whom, with deep commiseration pang'd,
Pallas replied. Alas! great need hast thou
Of thy long absent father to avenge
These num'rous wrongs; for could he now appear
There, at yon portal, arm'd with helmet, shield,
And grasping his two spears, such as when first
I saw him drinking joyous at our board,
From Ilus son of Mermeris, who dwelt
In distant Ephyre*, just then return'd,
(For thither also had Ulysses gone
In his swift bark, seeking some pois'nous drug Wherewith to taint his brazen arrows keen†,
Which drug through fear of the eternal Gods
Ilus refused, but readily my Sire Gave to him, for he lov'd him past belief)
Could now, Ulysses, clad in arms as then,

* Ephyre has been already noticed in the first volume of the Iliad as a city of Thebropia; but the Ephyre mentioned by Homer both there and here was probably Elis.
† The poet, it is observed, prepares us to see the suitors die by a single wound of these arrows.—B. & C.
Mix with these suitors, short his date of life.
To each, and bitter should his nuptials prove.
But whether, safe restored, he shall avenge,
In his own house, his wrongs, or whether not,
Rests, for decision, with the Gods alone.
Mean-time I counsel thee, thyself to think
By what means likeliest thou shalt expel
These from thy doors. Now mark me: close attend.
To morrow, summoning the Grecian Chiefs
To council, speak to them, and call the Gods
To witness that solemnity. Bid go
The suitors hence, each to his own abode,
And if thy mother's choice be strongly bent
To marriage, let her to the house return
Of her own potent father, who, himself,
Shall furnish forth her matrimonial rites,
And ample dow'r, such as it well becomes A darling daughter to receive, bestow.
But hear me now; thyself I thus advise.
The prime of all thy ships preparing, mann'd
With twenty rowers, voyage hence to seek Intelligence of thy long-absent Sire.
Some mortal may inform thee, or a word *

* "Οὐσα—a word spoken, with respect to the speaker, casually; but with reference to the inquirer supposed to be sent for his information by the especial appointment and providential favour of the Gods.
Perchance, by Jove directed (safest source Of notice to mankind) may reach thine ear.
First voyaging to Pylus, there enquire
Of noble Nestor; thence to Sparta tend,
To question Menelaus, last arrived
Of all the Greeks; and, if there thou learn
That still thy father lives, and hope obtain
Of his return, then, suffer as thou may'st,
With patience wait his coming, yet a year.
But should'st thou learn his death, then, seek again
Thy native shores, and, having heap'd his tomb,
And with due pomp his fun'ral rites perform'd,
Make thou thy mother's spousals, next, thy care.
These duties satisfied, deliberate last
Whether thou shalt these troublers of thy house
By stratagem, or by assault, destroy.
For thou art now no child, nor may'st pursue
The sports of children longer. Has the deed
Of brave Orestes never reach'd thine ear,
Whom all mankind extol? For he hath slain
Ægisithus, fly contriver of the death
Of Agamemnon, his illustrious fire.
And Thou, my youthful friend, whose form robust
And fair proportions with delight I view,
Be Thou brave also, that renown like His
Thou may'st acquire with ages yet to come.
But I will to my vessel now repair,
And to my mariners, whom, absent long,
I may perchance have troubled. Weigh thou well
My counsel; let not my advice be lost.

To whom Telemachus discrete replied.
Stranger! thy words bespeak thee much my friend,
Who, as a father teaches his own son,
Haft taught me what I never will forget.
But, though in haste thy voyage to pursue,
Yet stay, that in the bath refreshing first Thy limbs now weary, thou may'st sprightlier seek Thy gallant bark, charged with some noble gift
Of finish'd workmanship, which thou shalt keep
As my memorial ever; such a boon
As men confer on guests whom much they love.

Then thus Minerva, Goddess azure-eyed.
Retard me not, for go I must; the gift
Which lib'ral thou desirest to bestow
Give me at my return, that I may bear
The treasure home; and, in exchange, thyself
Expect some gift equivalent from me.

She spake, and as with eagle-wings upborne, Vanish'd incontinent, but him inspired
With daring fortitude, and on his heart
Dearer remembrance of his Sire impress'd
Than ever. Conscious of the mighty change,
Amazed he stood, and, in his secret thought
Revelling all, believed his guest a God.
The youthful Hero to the suitors then Repair'd; they silent, listen'd to the song
Of the illustrious Bard; he the return
Deplorable of the Achaian host
From Ilium by command of Pallas, sang.
Penelope, Icarius' daughter, mark'd
Mean-time the song celestial, where she sat
In the superior palace; down she came,
By all the num'rous steps of her abode;
Not sole, for two fair handmaids follow'd her.
She then, divinest of her sex, arrived
In presence of that lawless throng, beneath
The portal of her flately mansion stood,
Between her maidens, with her lucid veil
Her lovely features mantling. There, profuse
She wept, and thus the sacred bard bespake.

Phemius! for many a sorrow-soothing strain
Thou know'st beside, such as exploits record
Of Gods and men, the poet's frequent theme;
Give them of those a song, and let themselves
Their wine drink noiseless; but this mournful strain
Break off; unfriendly to my bosom's peace,
And which of all hearts nearest touches mine,
With such regret my dearest Lord I mourn,

Rememb'ring
Rememb'ring still an husband praise'd from fide
To fide, and in the very heart of Greece.

Then answer thus Telemachus return'd.
My mother! leave the tuneful bard unblamed
To his own choice. No bard, himself, creates
The woes of which he sings, but Jove supplies
Each, at his pleasure, with a mournful theme;
And He records Achaia's hapless doom
Thus sweetly, with good caufe; for newest strains
Most take the list'ning ear. Of all who fought
At Troy, Ulyfles hath not loft, alone,
His day of glad return; but many a Chief Hath perifh'd also. Seek thou then again
Thy own apartment, spindle ply and loom,
And task thy maidens; management belongs
To men of joys convivial, and of men
Especially to me, chief ruler here*.

She heard astonish'd; and the prudent speech
Reposing of her fon deep in her heart,
Again with her attendant maidens fought

* This part of the speech of Telemachus has been rejected by some critics who contend that whatever propriety it may have when addressed by Hecftr to Andromache, it has not the fame when addressed by a fon to his mother. But Telemachus probably uses it, not as a reproof to her, but that the suitors hearing it, may infer from it his determined purpose to take the management of his fa-nily henceforth into his own hands. To be master, in fhort, for the time to come, and a child no longer.—B.
Her upper chamber. There arrived, she wept
Her loft Ulysses; till Minerva bathed
Her weary lids in dewy sleep profound.
Then echoed through the gloomy vaults of all
The lofty roof, the suitors' boist'rous roar,
For each was hot to share the royal bed.
Whom thus Telemachus discrete address'd.

All ye my mother's suitors, though addict
To contumacious wrangling fierce, suspend
Your clamour; for a course to me it seems More decent far, when such a bard as this,
Godlike for sweetness, sings, to hear his song.
To morrow meet we in full council all,
That I may plainly warn you to depart
From this our mansion. Seek ye where ye may Your feasts; consume your own, alternate fed
Each at the other's cost; but if it seem
Wisest in your account and best, to eat
Voracious thus the patrimonial goods
Of one man, rend'ring no account of all*;
Bite to the roots; but know that I will cry
Ceaseless to the eternal Gods, in hope
That Jove, for retribution of the wrong,
Shall doom you, where ye have intruded, there
To bleed, and of your blood ask no account*.

* There is in the Original an evident stress laid on the word
Νήπτονι, which is used in both places. It was a sort of Lex Talis.
He ended, and each gnaw'd his lip, aghast
At his undaunted hardiness of speech.

Then thus Antinoüs spake, Eupithes' son.
Telemachus! the Gods, methinks, themselves
Teach thee sublimity, and to pronounce Thy matter fearless. Ah forbid it, Jove!
That one so eloquent should with the weight
Of kingly cares in Ithaca be charged,
A realm, by claim hereditary, thine.

Then prudent thus Telemachus replied.
Although my speech, Antinoüs, may, perchance,
Provoke thee, know that I am not averse
From kingly cares, if Jove appoint me such.
Seems it to thee a burthen to be fear'd
By men above all others? trust me, no.

There is no ill in royalty; the man
So flation'd, waits not long ere he obtain Riches and honour. But I grant that Kings
Of the Achaians may no few be found
In sea-girt Ithaca both young and old,
Of whom since great Ulysses is no more,
Reign who so may; but King, myself, I am
In my own house, and over all my own which Telemachus hoped might be put in force against them; and that Jove would demand no satisfaction for the lives of those, who made him none for the waste of his property.

Domestics, by Ulysses gained for me.

To whom Eurymachus replied, the son
Of Polybus. What Grecian Chief shall reign
In sea-girt Ithaca, must be referr'd
To the Gods' will, Telemachus! mean-time
Ulysses' rich possessions and his house
Are doubtless thine, and thou art sov'reign here.
May never that man on her shores arrive,
While an inhabitant shall yet be left
In Ithaca, who shall by violence wrest
Thine from thee. But permit me, noble Sir!
To ask thee of thy guest. Whence came the man?
What country claims him? Where are to be found
His kindred and his patrimonial fields?
Brings he glad tidings of thy Sire's approach
Homeward? or came he to receive a debt
Due to himself? How swift he disappear'd!
Nor opportunity to know him gave
To those who wish'd it; for his face and air
Him speak not of Plebeian birth obscure.

Whom answer'd thus Telemachus discrete.
Eurymachus! my father comes no more.
I can no longer credit tidings now,
If such arrive; nor heed I more the song
Of sooth-sayers whom my mother may consult.
But this my guest hath known in other days
My father, sea-girt Taphos is his home,
Mentes his name, Anchialus his fire,
And his control the Taphian race, renown'd
For naval skill, unanimous obey.

So spake Telemachus, but in his heart
Knew well his guest a Goddess from the skies.
Then they to dance and heart-enlivening song
Turn'd joyous, waiting the approach of eve;
The dusky evening found them joyous still,
When each, to his own house retiring, sought Needful repose. Telemachus, the while,
In various musings occupied, to rest
Also retired, in his own chamber, built
On the hall-roof, conspicuous from afar.
Sage Euryclea, bearing in each hand
A torch, preceded him; her fire was Ops, Piícñor's son, and, in her early prime,
At his own cost Laertes made her his,
Paying with twenty beeves her purchase-price,
Nor in less honour than his spotless wife
He held her ever; but his comfort's wrath
Fearing, at no time call'd her to his bed.
She bore the torches, and with truer heart
Loved him than any of the female train,
For she had nurs'd him in his infant years.
He open'd his broad chamber-valves, and sat
On his couch-side; then, putting off his vest
Of softest texture, placed it in the hands
Of the attendant dame discrete, who first Folding it with exactest care, beside His bed suspended it, and, going forth,
Drew by its silver ring the portal close,
And fasten’d it with bolt and brace secure.
There lay Telemachus, on finest wool
Reposed, contemplating all night his course
Prescribed by Pallas to the Pylian shore.
ARGUMENT OF THE SECOND BOOK.

Tlemachus having convened an assembly of the Greeks, publicly calls on the Suitors to relinquish the house of Ulysses. During the continuance of the Council he has much to suffer from the petulance of the Suitors, from whom, having informed them of his design to undertake a voyage in hope to obtain news of Ulysses, he asks a ship, with all things necessary for the purpose. He is refused, but is afterwards furnished with what he wants by Minerva, in the form of Mentor. He embarks in the evening without the privy of his mother, and the Goddess fails with him.

BOOK II.

Aurora, rosy daughter of the dawn,
Now ting'd the East, when, habited again,
Uprose Ulysses' offspring from his bed.
Athwart his back his faulchion keen he flung,
His sandals bound to his unfilled feet,
And, godlike, issued from his chamber-door.
At once the clear-voiced heralds he enjoin'd
To call the Greeks to council; they aloud
Gave forth the summons, and the throng began.
When all were gather'd, and th' assembly fall,
He grasp'd his lance, and, setting forth, repair'd, Himself, to council; nor alone he went, But follow'd by his hounds, a faithful pair. O'er all his form Minerva largely shed Majestic grace divine, and, as he moved, The gazing crowd his princely port admired. The seniors gave him place, and down he sat On his paternal throne. Then grave arose The Hero, old Aegyptius; bow'd with age Was he, and by experience deep-inform'd*. His son had with Ulysses, godlike Chief, On board his fleet to distant Ilium gone, The warrior Antiphus, whom in his cave The savage Cyclops flew, and on his flesh At ev'n'ning made obscene his last regale. Three sons he had beside, a suitor one, Eurynomus; whose brothers, day by day, Both serv'd their antient father in his fields. Yet he forgat not, father as he was

* Euflathius remarks it as a symptom that the poet himself was also an orator, and knew how difficult a young man must find it to open a debate by speaking first in the presence of more experienced persons, that he configns that part of the business to Aegyptius, a speaker of long practice, who by interrogating the assembly gives Telemachus an opportunity to answer; an easier task than to introduce the subject with nothing to lead to it. The young prince has the same advantage afforded him in the third book, where Nestor prepares the way for him by an enquiry concerning the cause of his voyage.—C.
Of these, his absent eldest, whom he mourn'd
Ceaseless, and thus his speech, with tears, began.

Hear me, ye men of Ithaca, my friends!
Nor council here nor session hath been held
Since great Ulysses left his native shore.
Who now convenes us? what especial need
Hath urged him, whether of our youth he be,
Or of our senators by age matured?
Have tidings reach'd him of our host's return,
Which here he would divulge? or brings he aught
Of publick import on a different theme?
I deem him, whose'er he be, a man
Worthy to prosper, and may Jove vouchsafe
A blessing on the purpose of his heart!

He ended, and Tellemachus rejoiced
In that good omen. Ardent to begin,
He sat not long, but, moving to the midst,
Received the sceptre from Phoenix's hand,
His prudent herald, and addressing, next,
The hoary Chief Ægyptius, thus replied.

Not far remote, as thou shalt soon thyself
Perceive, oh venerable Chief! he stands,
Who hath convened this council. I, am He.
I am in chief the sufferer. Tidings none
Of the returning host I have received,
Which here I would divulge, nor bring I aught

Of
Of publick import on a different theme,
But my own trouble, on my own house fall'n,
And two-fold fall'n. One is, that I have lost
A noble father, who, as fathers rule
Benign their children, govern'd once yourselves;
The other, and the more alarming ill,
With ruin threatens my whole house, and all
My patrimony with immediate waste.
Suitors, (their children who in this our isle Hold highest rank) importunate besiege
My mother, though desirous not to wed,
Dare not solicit, in that cause, her Sire
Icarius, who might give his daughter dow'r,
And portion her to whom he most approves,
(A course which, only named, moves their disquiet)
But rather choose, intruding here, to slay
My sheep, and beccves, and fatted goats, and drink
My fable wine—waste hard to be sustain'd.
For I have no Ulysses to relieve Me and my family from this abuse.
Ourselves are not sufficient; we, alas!
Too feeble should be found, and yet to learn
How best to use the little force we own;
Else, had I pow'r, I would, myself, redress
The evil; for it now surpasses far
All suff'rance, now they savage uncontroll'd,
Nor
Nor shew of decency vouchsafe me more.
Refuse, yourselves, this outrage; dread the blame
Which, else, ye must incur from ev'ry state
Around us, and the anger of the Gods,
Left they impute these impious deeds to you.*
I, next, adjure you by Olympian Jove,
By Themis, who convenes and who dissolves
All councils†, that ye interpose, my friends!
To check them, and afford to my distress
A solitary and a silent home.
But if Ulysses, my illustrious Sire,
Hath injur'd any noble Greecian here,
Whose wrongs ye purpose to avenge on me,
Then, aid them openly; for better far
Were my condition, if yourselves consumed
My revenue‡; ye should compensate soon
My suff'rings at your hands; for my complaints

* The reader is to be reminded that this is not an assembly of the suitors only, but a general one, which affords Telemachus an opportunity to apply himself to the feelings of the Ithacans at large.

† It is said by some to have been customary with the antients to introduce the image of Themis into all their public assemblies,—C. as the representative of peace and justice.

‡ The word revenue is very nearly a literal translation of the original word προέκτος, which Barnes, and Clarke after him, render by the word proventus. This seems the better sense of it, though there are others who understand it to signify moveables, especially such things as are self-moved, sheep, oxen, &c.
Should rouse all Ithaca to my redress,
Nor cease, till I were satisfied for all;
But now, conniving at the wrong, ye pierce
My soul with anguish not to be endured.

He spake impasion'd, and to earth cast down
His sceptre, weeping. Pity at that sight
Seiz'd all the people; mute the assembly fat
Long time, none dared with answer rough to greet Telemachus, till of them all, at last,
Antinoüs, sole arising, thus replied,

Telemachus, intemp'rate in harangue,
High-founding orator! it is thy drift
To make us odious, all; but the offence
Lies not with us the suitors; she alone
Thy mother, who in subtlety excels,
And deep-wrought subterfuge, deserves the blame.
Three years entire, and, now, well nigh a fourth,
She hath beguiled with her delusive arts
The Greeians; message after message sent Brings hope to each, by turns, and promise fair;
But she, mean-time, far otherwise intends.
Her other arts exhausted all, she framed
This stratagem; a web of amplest fize
And subtest woof beginning, thus she spake*.

* The web she began was of the largest dimensions and of the finest texture, because a work of that kind proceeding slowly, both Princes, my suitors! since the noble Chief
Ulysses is no more, press not as yet
My nuptials, wait till I shall finish, first,
A fun'ral robe (left all my threads decay)
Which for the antient Hero I prepare,
Laertes, looking for the mournful hour
When fate shall snatch him to eternal rest;
Else, I the censure dread of all my sex,
Should he, so wealthy, want at last a shroud.
So spake the Queen, and unsuspicious, we
With her request complied. Thenceforth, all day
She wove the ample web, and by the aid
Of torches ravell'd it again at night.
Three years by such contrivance she deceived
The Grecians; but when (three whole years elaps'd)
The fourth arrived, then, conscious of the fraud,
A damsel of her train told all the truth,
And we surpris'd her marring all her work.
Thus, through necessity she hath, at length,
Perform'd the task, and in her own despite.
Therefore, to satisfy not thee alone
But all men here assembled, we reply.
Dismiss thy mother with a charge to wed on account of the size and the difficulty with which it would be performed, the suitors would the less wonder at the time it cost to accomplish it.—C.

Whom most Icarius and herself approve.
But should she still torment us with delay,
Studious, alone to merit praise for arts
By Pallas giv'n her largely; matchless skill
To weave the splendid web; sanguine thought;
And shrewdness, such as never fame ascribed
To any beauteous Greek of antient days,
Tyro, Mycene, or Alcmena lov'd
By Jove himself, all whom th' accomplish'd Queen Transcends in knowledge, ignorant alone
That wooed long-time she should, at last, be won,
Then know, that while the Gods with adverse sway Thus warp her judgment, ev'ry suitor, still, Shall banquet at thy cost. A glorious name
She to herself insures, but equal woe
And devastation of thy wealth to thee;
For neither to our proper works at home
Go we, of that be sure, nor yet elsewhere,
Till him she wed to whom she most inclines*

Then prudent, thus, Telemachus replied.
Antinoüs! to thrust the mother forth

* Some have understood that Antilochus, in this close of his speech, produced a prophecy without intending it, because the suitors in fact did not depart till Ulysses came, the only person of her choice, and slew them. But Clarke judges, and seemingly with good reason, that the interpretation is a mere subtlety and of no value; though Madame Dacier approves it.
Who gave me birth and rear'd me, were a deed
Unnat'ral and impossible to me.
Alive or dead, my Sire is far remote,
And shoul'd I, voluntary, hence dismiss
My mother to Icarius, I must much Refund, which hardship were and loss to me *
So doing, I should also wrath incur
From my offended Sire, and from the Gods
Still more; for she, departing, would invoke
Erynnis to avenge her, and reproach
Befide would follow me from all mankind.
That word I, therefore, never will pronounce.
No, if ye judge your treatment at her hands
Injurious to you, go ye forth yourselves,
Forfake my mansion; seek where else ye may Your feasts; consume your own; alternate feed
Each at the other's cost. But if it seem
Wisest in your account and best to eat
Voraciously the patrimonial goods
Of one man, rend'ring no account of all,
Bite to the roots; but know that I will cry

* The commentators are here divided in opinion, doubting whether Telemachus means to say, that if he sends away his mother he must refund her dower to Icarius, or if he sends her to Icarius, he must incur great evil.—B. & C. The words will bear either sense, according to their punctuation, but Daucier and Clarke both give the preference to that in which the passage is here rendered.

Ceaseless
Ceaselet's to the eternal Gods, in hope
That Jove, in retribution of the wrong,
Shall doom you, where ye have intruded, there
To bleed, and of your blood ask no account.

So spake Telemachus, and while he spake,
The Thund'rer from a lofty mountain-top
Turn'd off two eagles; on the winds, awhile,
With outspread pinions ample side by side
They floated; but, ere long, hov'ring aloft,
Right o'er the midst of the assembled Chiefs
They wheel'd around, clang'd all their num'rous plumes,
And eyeing with a downward look the throng,
Death boded, ominous; then rending each
The other's face and neck, they sprang at once Toward the right, and darted through the town*.

Amazement universal, at that sight,
Seized the assembly, and with anxious thought
Each scann'd the future; amidst whom arose
The Hero Halitherses, antient Seer, Offspring ofMaftor; for in judgment he
Of portents augural, and in forecast
Unerring, his coevals all excell'd,
And prudent thus the multitude bespake.

* Not the faces and necks of the suitors, as some have very aburdly imagined, but each others, for an unanswerable reason which the learned reader will find in Clarke.
Hear, all ye men of Ithaca! but hear
Ye Suitors chiefly, for I speak of woes
Tremendous, by the Gods prepared for you.
Ulysses shall not from his friends, henceforth,
Live absent long, but, hastening to his home,
Comes even now, and as he comes, designs
A bloody death for these, whose bitter woes
No few shall share, inhabitants with us
Of pleasant Ithaca; but let us frame
Effective means maturely to suppress
Their violent deeds, or rather let themselves
Repentant cease; and soonest shall be best.
Not inexpert, but well-inform'd I speak
The future, and the accomplishment announce
Of all which when Ulysses with the Greeks
Embark'd for Troy, I to himself foretold.
I said that, after many woes, and loss
Of all his people, in the twentieth year,
Unknown to all, he should regain his home,
And my prediction shall be now fulfill'd.

Him, then, Eurymachus thus answer'd rough
The son of Polybus. Hence, dotard! Hence
To thy own house; there prophesying, warn
Thy children of calamities to come.
Birds num'rous flutter in the beams of day,
Not all predictive. Death, far hence remote Hath found Ulysses, and I would to heav'n
That, where he died, thyself had perish'd too.
Then had'st thou not with these prophetic strains
O'erwhelm'd us, nor Telemachus impell'd
Already thus incensed, in hope to win,
Perchance, for thine some favour at his hands.
But I to thee foretell, skilled as thou art
In legends old, (nor shall my threat be vain)
That if by artifice thou move to wrath
A younger than thyself, no matter whom,
Thou shalt but plunge him deeper, in his cause
Much enterprising, and performing nought,
And we will charge thyself with such a fine
As thou shalt pay with difficulty, and bear
The burthen of it with an aching heart.
As for Telemachus, I him advise,
Myself, and press the measure on his choice
Earnestly, that he send his mother hence
To her own father's house, who shall, himself,
Set forth her nuptial rites, and shall endow
His daughter sumptuously, and as he ought.
For this expensive wooing, as I judge,
Till then shall never cease; since we regard No man—no—not Telemachus, although \[ \text{In} \]

In words exub'rant; neither fear we aught
Thy vain prognostics, venerable sir!
But only hate thee for their sake the more.
Waste will continue and disorder soul
Unremedied, so long as she shall hold
The suitors in suspense, for, day by day,
Our emulation goads us to the strife,
Nor shall we seek, departing hence, to espouse
Each his own comfort suitable elsewhere.

To whom, discrete, Telemachus replied.
Eurymachus, and ye the suitor train
Illustrious, I have spoken; ye shall hear
No more this supplication urged by me.
The Gods, and all the Greeks, now know the truth.
But give me instantly a gallant bark
With twenty rowers, skil'd their course to win
To whatsoever haven; for I go
To sandy Pylus, and shall hasten thence To Lacedemon, tidings to obtain
Of my long-absent Sire, or from the lips
Of man, or by a word from Jove vouchsafed
Himself, best source of notice to mankind.
If, there inform'd that still my father lives
I hope conceive of his return, although Distress'd, I shall be patient yet a year.
But should I haply learn that he survives
No longer, then, returning, I will raise
At home his tomb, will with such pomp perform
His fun'ral rites, as his great name demands,
And give my mother's hand to whom I may.

This said, he sat, and after him arose
Mentor, illustrious Ulysses' friend,
To whom, embarking thence, he had consign'd
All his concerns, that, under his discrete
And just control, his household might enjoy
Peace and security till his return.

Arising, thus the senior, sage, began.

Hear me, ye Ithacans! be never King
From this time forth, benevolent, humane
Or righteous, but let every sceptred hand
Rule merciless, and deal in wrong alone,
Since none of all his people, whom he sway'd
With such paternal gentleness and love,
Remembers the divine Ulysses more!
That the imperious suitors thus should weave
The web of mischief and atrocious wrong,
I grudge not; since at hazard of their heads
They make Ulysses' property a prey,
Persuaded that the Hero comes no more.
But much the people move me: how ye sit
All mute, and, though a crowd opposed to few,
Check not the suitors with a single word!

Then thus Liocritus, Evenor's son.
Injurious Mentor! headlong orator!
How dar'st thou move the populace against The suitors? Trust me they should find it hard.
Numerous as they are, to cope with us,
A feast the prize. Or should the King himself
Of Ithaca, returning, undertake
T' expel the jovial suitors from his house,
Much as Penelope his absence mourns,
His presence should afford her little joy;
For fighting sole with many, he should meet
A dreadful death. Thou, therefore, speak'st amiss.
Mentor and Halytheres, from their youth
His father's chosen friends, shall furnish forth Telemachus; but likelier far it seems That news should reach him here, than that himself
In search of news, should reach the Pylian shore*

Thus saying, Liocritus dissolved in haste

* The poet, it is observed by the Scholiast, represents Antinous as a plain and artless speaker, Eurymachus as vehement and haughty, and Liocritus as a man of not many words, but daring and insolent, who not only expresses himself contemptuously when he mentions Ulysses, but breaks up the council abruptly though he had not convened it.—B. & C. Eustathius makes the same observation.—C.

The
The council, and the scatt'red concourse fought
Their sev'ral homes, while all the suitors flock'd Thence to the palace of their absent King.
Mean-time, Telemachus from all resort
Retiring, in the surf of the gray Deep
Firft laved his hands, then, thus to Pallas pray'd.

O Goddess! who wast yesterday a guest
Beneath my roof, and didst enjoin me then
A voyage o'er the fable Deep in quest
Of tidings of my long-regretted Sire!
Behold! the Greeks, but, most of all, the proud
Injurious suitors thwart the whole design.

Such pray'r he made; then Pallas, in the form,
And with the voice of Mentor, drawing nigh,
In accents wing'd, him kindly thus be-spake.

Telemachus! thou shalt hereafter prove Nor base, nor poor in talents. If, in truth,
Thou have received from heav'n thy father's force
Instill'd into thee, and resemblest him
In promptness both of action and of speech,
Thy voyage shall not useless be, or vain.
But if Penelope produced thee not
His son, I hope not, then, a good effect
Of this design which, ardent, thou pursuest.
Few sons their fathers equal; most appear Degenerate; but we find, though rare, sometimes
A son superiour even to his Sire *.
And since thyself shalt neither base be found
Nor spiritless, nor altogether void
Of talents, such as in Ulysses shone,
I therefore hope success of thy attempt.
Heed not the suitors' projects; neither wise
Are they, nor just, nor aught suspect the doom
Which now approaches them, and in one day
Shall overwhelm them all. No long suspense
Shall hold thy purposed enterprize in doubt,
Such help from me, of old thy father's friend,
Thou shalt receive, who with a bark well-oar'd
Will serve thee, and myself attend thee forth.
But haste, join thou the suitors, and provide,
In sep'rate vessels flow'd, all needful stores,
Wine in thy jars, and flour, the strength of man,
In skins close-seam'd. I will, mean-time, select Such as shall voluntary share thy toils.
In sea-girt Ithaca new ships and old
Abound, and I will choose, myself, for thee
The prime of all, which without more delay

* The sentiment is justified by the opinion of many Antients. Aeius Spartianus in his life of the Emperor Severus says "It is sufficiently known that hardly any great man has left a son of much merit or use behind him."—The sons of heroes are a nuisance, was proverbial, and Demosthenes observed that good and valuable men are so often succeeded by a race of triflers, that it seems the effect of some fatality.—C.
We will launch out into the spacious Deep.

So Pallas, progeny of Jove; nor long,
Thus greeted by the voice divine, delay'd Telemachus, but to his palace went Distress'd in heart. He found the suitors there Goats flaying in the hall, and fatted swine
Roasting; when with a laugh Antinoüs flew
To meet him, fasten'd on his hand, and said,

Telemachus, in eloquence sublime,
And of a spirit not to be controll'd!
Give harbour in thy breast on no account
To after-grudge or enmity, but eat
Rather with cheerfulness as thou art wont,
And freely drink, committing all thy cares
To the Achaians, who shall furnish forth
A gallant ship and chosen crew for thee,
That thou may'st hence to Pylus with all speed,
Tidings to learn of thy illustrious Sire.

To whom Telemachus, discrete, replied.
Antinoüs! I have no heart to feast
With guests so insolent, nor can indulge
The pleasures of a mind at ease, with you.
May it not well suffice you to have used
My noble patrimony as your own
While I was yet a child? now, grown mature,
And competent to understand the speech
Of my instructors, feeling, too, a mind
Within me conscious of augmented pow’rs,
I will attempt your ruin, be assured,
Whether at Pylus, or continuing here.
I go, indeed, (nor shall my voyage prove Of which I speak, a fruitless one) I go
An humble passenger, who neither bark
Nor rowers have to boast my own, denied
That honour (so ye judg’d it best) by you.

He said, and from Antinoüs’ hand his own
Drew softly. Then their delicate repast
The busy suitors on all sides prepared,
Still taunting as they toil’d, and with sharp speech
Sarcastic wantoning, of whom a youth,
Arrogant as his fellows, thus began.

Our doom is fixt, and we must all be slain.
Either Telemachus will aids procure
From sandy Pylus, or will bring them arm’d
From Sparta; such is his tremendous drift.
Even to fruitful Ephyre, perchance,
He will proceed, seeking some baneful herb
Which cast into our cup, shall drug us all*.

* It is as plain in the original as in the translation that the suitors speak ironically, though the Scholium, much to the astonishment of Clarke, understands them as expressing serious apprehensions that Telemachus has framed some such project. It is indeed hardly possible not to remark with how much labour the commentators sometimes misinterpret, especially when the true sense is obvious.
Another, in his turn, thus scoff'd aloud.
Who knows but that himself, while far remote
From all his friends, he roams the dreary Deep,
May perish like Ulysses? Whence to us
Should double toil ensue, on whom the charge
To parcel out his wealth would then devolve,
And to endow his mother with the house
For his abode whom she should chance to wed.

So sported they; but he, ascending, sought
His father's chamber, where his brass and gold
And raiment in capacious chests he kept,
And oils of fragrant scent, a copious store.
There many a cask with season'd nectar fill'd
The grape's pure juice divine, beside the wall
Stood waiting, orderly arranged, the hour
(Should e'er such hour arrive) when, after woes Num'rous, Ulysses should regain his home.
Secure that chamber was with folding doors
Of massy planks compact, and, night and day,
Within it antient Euryclea dwelt,
Guardian discrete of all the treasures there,
Whom, thither call'd, Telemachus address'd.

Nurse! draw me forth sweet wine into my jars,
Delicious next to that which thou reserv'st
For our poor wand'rer; if escaping death
At last, divine Ulysses e'er return.
Fill twelve, and stop them close; pour also meal
Well-mill'd (full twenty measures) into skins
Close-seam'd, and mention what thou dost to none *
Place them together; for at even-tide
Soon as the Queen, retiring to her couch
Shall seek repose, I will bestow them all
On board a bark; for to the Pylian shore
And Spartan, there to gather, if I may,
Some hopes that still Ulysses lives, I go.

He ended, and in accents shrill that spoke
Her tender fears, his gentle nurse exclam'd.

My child! ah, wherefore hath a thought so rash
Poss'd thee? whither, only and belov'd,
Seek'st thou to ramble, travelling, alas!
To distant climes? Ulysses is no more;
Dead lies the Hero in some land unknown,
And thou no sooner shalt depart, than these Will plot to slay thee, and divide thy wealth.
No, stay with us who love thee. Need is none
That thou should'st on the barren Deep distress Encounter, roaming without hope or end †.

* The Scholiaft tells us that the Antients kept their flour in skins and not in sacks, which were a subsequent invention, and applied the word measure both to wet and dry.—B. & C.
† She speaks of the death of Ulysses as a certainty, the more effectually to deter Telemachus from his voyage, though it is plain that she did not in reality consider it as such, since she kept for him with so much care the very best of all the wines entrusted to her.—C.
Whom, prudent, thus answer'd Telemachus.
Take courage, nurse! for not without consent
Of the Immortals I have thus resolved.
But swear, that till eleven days be past,
Or twelve, or, till enquiry made, she learn
Herself my going, thou wilt nought impart
Of this my purpose to my mother's ear,
Left all her beauties fade by grief impair'd.

He ended, and the antient matron swore Solemnly by the Gods; which done, she fill'd
With wine the vessels and the skins with meal,
And he, returning, join'd the throng below *.

Then Pallas, Goddess azure-eyed, her thoughts Elsewhere directing, all the city ranged
In semblance of Telemachus, each man
Exhorting, at the dusk of eve, to seek
The gallant ship, and from Noémon, son
Renown'd of Phronius, ask'd, herself, a bark,
Which soon as ask'd, he promis'd to supply †.

Now

* The word swear serves us for oaths of both kinds, both negative and affirmative; but the Greeks had words to distinguish them; ἐπαμφισθείς signifying to swear that a thing shall be done, ἐπαμφισθεῖν, that it shall not.—C. The latter is the word used here.

† Both Euflathius and the Scholiast understand here a secret meaning, and consider the exhortations given by Minerva in the form of Telemachus, as an allegorical way of saying, that the Ithacans being much impressed and affected with the remembrance of Now set the sun, and twilight dimm'd the ways,
When, drawing down his bark into the Deep,
He gave her all her furniture, oars, arms
And tackle, such as well-built galleys bear,
Then moor'd her in the bottom of the bay.
Mean-time, his mariners in haste repair'd
Down to the shore, for Pallas urged them on.
And now, on other purposes intent,
The Goddess fought the palace, where with dews
Of slumber drenching ev'ry suitor's eye,
She fool'd the drunkard multitude, and dash'd
The goblets from their idle hands away.
They through the city reeled, all glad to leave
The dull carousal, when the slumb'rous weight
Oppressive on their eyelids once had fall'n.
Next, Pallas azure-eyed in Mentor's form
And with the voice of Mentor, summoning Telemachus abroad, him thus bespake.

Telemachus! already at their oars
Sit all thy fellow-voyagers, and wait
Thy coming; linger not, but haste away.

of what had pass'd in council, seeming still to have the figure of Te-lemachus before their eyes, and convinced that he had required only what was reasonable and just, though they accounted it too dangerous an enterprise to engage publickly on his side, had yet no unwillingness to accommodate him with a ship, or even to furnish him from among themselves with mariners.—B. & C.

This
This said, Minerva led him thence, whom he
With nimble steps pursued, and, on the shore
Arrived, found all his mariners prepared,
Whom thus the princely voyager address’d.

Haste ye, my friends! and from the palace bring
The stores, which all stand ready; but the Queen
Of this my purposed voyage nothing knows,
Nor the Queen’s women aught, save One alone.

He spake, and led them; they, obedient, brought
All down, and, as Ulysses’ son enjoin’d,
Within the gallant bark the charge beflow’d.

Then, led by Pallas, went the prince on board,
Where down they sat, the Goddess in the stern,
And at her side Telemachus. The crew
Cast loose the hawfers, and, embarking, fill’d
The benches. Blue-eyed Pallas from the West
Call’d forth propitious breezes; fresh they curled
The sable Deep, and, founding, swept the waves.
He loud-exhorting them, his people bade
Hand, brisk, the tackle; they, obedient, reared
The pine-tree mast, which in its socket deep
They lodg’d, then strain’d the cordage, and with thongs
Well-twisted, drew the shining sail aloft.
A land-breeze fill’d the canvas, and the flood Roar’d as she went against the steady bark
That ran with even course her liquid way.

VOL. III. The
The rigging, thus, of all the galley set,
Their beakers crowning high with wine, they hail'd
The ever-living Gods, but above all
Minerva, daughter azure-eyed of Jove.
Thus, all night long the galley, and till dawn
Had brighten'd into day, cleaved swift the flood *.

* Scaliger comparing the two lines of Homer
   "Επερχον τ' ἄλμος μέσον ἱάων ἄμφι δὲ κῦμα Στείφῃ ποτφύριον μεγάλ' ἑκές, νηδί ἵδεν with the following two of Virgil
   Tendunt vela Noti; fugimus spumantibus undis Qua curfum ventusque gubernatorque vocabant, is enraptured with the last of Virgil's, and for the sake of it gives him the preference. But, as Clarke justly observes, the learned Critick forgot himself a little, for the line that charms him to such a degree is almost a literal version of a line found in the eleventh book of the Odyssey.

—Τὴν ὅ ήμερος τε κυβερνήτης τ' ἱθυεν.
Telemachus arriving at Pylus, inquires of Nestor concerning Ulysses. Nestor relates to him all that he knows or has heard of the Greeks since their departure from Troy, but not being able to give him any satisfactory account of Ulysses, refers him to Menelaus. At evening Minerva quits Telemachus, but discovers herself in going. Nestor sacrifices to the Goddess, and the solemnity ended, Telemachus sets forth for Sparta in one of Nestor's chariots, and accompanied by Nestor's son Pisistratus.

BOOK III.

The sun, emerging from the lucid waves,
Ascended now the brazen vault with light
For the inhabitants of earth and heav'n,
When in their bark at Pylus they arrived,
City of Neleus. On the shore they found
The people sacrificing; bulls they flew
Black without spot, to Neptune azure-hair'd *.

* On the southern side of Pylus stood a town called Lepreos, at the distance of forty stadia from the sea. In the midway between Lepreos and Annios stood the temple of Samian Neptune, distant an hundred stadia from each. At that temple it was that Telemachus found the Pylians performing sacrifice.—C.
On ranges nine of feats they fat; each range Received five hundred, and to each they made Allotment equal of nine fable bulls *
The feast was now begun; these tasting † fat
The entrails, those flood off'ring to the God
The thighs, his portion, when the Ithacans
Push'd right ashore, and, furling close the sails,
And making fast their moorings, disembark'd.
Forth came Telemachus by Pallas led,
Whom thus the Goddess azure-eyed address'd.
Telemachus! there is no longer room
For bashful fear, since thou hast cross'd the flood
With purpose to enquire what land conceals
Thy father, and what fate hath followed him.
Advance at once to the equestrian Chief Nestor, within whose bosom lies, perhaps,
Advice well worthy of thy search; entreat
An answer at his lips sincere and true,
Who will not lye, for he is passing wise.
To whom Telemachus discrete replied.
Ah Mentor! how can I advance, how greet

* In Pylus were nine cities, and each city had a seat or bench appropriated to it.—B. & C.

† They are said to taste them only, because they were a great multitude, and the entrails would not afford more than a taste for each.—C.
A Chief like him, unpractis'd as I am
In manag'd phrase? Shame bids the youth beware
How he accosts the man of many years.

But thus the blue-eyed Goddess in return.
Telemachus! Thou wilt, in part, thyself
Fit speech devise, and heav'n will give the rest:
For thou wast neither born, nor haft been train'd to manhood, under unpropitious Pow'rs.

So saying, Minerva led him thence, whom he
With nimble steps attending, soon arrived
Among the multitude. There Nestor sat,
And Nestor's sons, while, busily the feast Tending, his num'rous followers roasting, some,
The viands, some, transfix'd them with the spits.
They seeing guests arrived, together all
Advanced, and, grasping courteously their hands,
Invited them to sit; but first, the son
Of Nestor, young Pisistratus, approach'd,
Who, fast'ning on the hands of both, beside
The banquet placed them, where the beach was spread
With fleeces, and where Thrasymedes sat
His brother, and the hoary Chief his Sire.
To each, a portion of the inner parts
He gave, then fill'd a golden cup with wine,
Which, tasted first, he to the daughter bore
Of Jove the Thund’rer, and her thus bespake,
Now, stranger! worship Neptune; for the feast,
As it hath chanced, which ye arrive to share
Is sacred to the Sov’reign of the waves;
Libation therefore, first, thyself perform,
And supplication, as thy duty bids,
Then give the goblet of delicious wine
To this thy fellow-voyager, that He Pour forth libation also; for I deem Him wont to pray; since all of ev’ry land Need succour from the Gods. But he is young;
Coeval with myself; and, for that cause,
I shall present the goblet first to Thee.

He ceas’d, and to her hand confign’d the cup,
Which Pallas gladly from a youth received
So just and wise, who to herself had first
The golden cup presented*. Then she pray’d,
And thus the Sov’reign of the Seas adored.

Hear, earth-encircler Neptune! O vouchsafe

* Plutarch observes that Minerva rejoices in Pisistratus neither because he is rich, nor because he is beautiful, nor because he is strong, but because he is prudent and judicious. The same joy is expressed in the Pythian Oracle cited by Barnes.

Εὐσεβίου δὲ βροτῶν γάλακτις τόσον, ὡσαυ ὦ Κλήμπτο.—C.
Heav’n is not more my joy, than pious men.
To us thy suppliants the desired effect
Of this our voyage; glory, first, bestow
On Nestor and his offspring both, then grant
To all the Pylians such a gracious boon
As shall requite their noble off'ring well.
Grant also to Telemachus and me
To voyage hence, possess'd of what we fought
When hither in our fable bark we came.

So Pallas pray'd, and her own pray'r herself Accomplish'd. To Telemachus she gave
The splendid goblet next, and in his turn
His pray'r Ulysses' offspring also made.
And now (the banquet from the spits withdrawn)
They, next, distributed sufficient share
To each, and all were sumptuously regaled.
At length (both hunger satisfied and thirst)
Thus Nestor, the Gerenian Chief, began.

Now with more seemliness we may enquire,
After repast, what guests we have received.
Our guests! who are ye? Whence have ye the waves Plough'd hither? Come ye to transact concerns Commercial, or at random roam the Deep
Like pirates, who with mischief charged and woe
To foreign States, oft hazard life themselves *?

Him

* The Antients, it is observed by the Scholiaft, accounted piracy no dishonourable occupation.—B. & C. And Thucydides says, The Greccians
Him answer'd, bolder now, but still discrete, Telemachus. For Pallas had his heart With manly courage arm'd, that he might ask From Nestor tidings of his absent Sire, And win, himself, distinction and renown. Oh Nestor, Neleus' son, glory of Greece! Thou askest whence we are. I tell thee whence. From Ithaca, by the umbrageous woods Of Neritus o'erhung, by private need, Not publick, urged, we come. Desire to learn The mighty deeds of my illustrious Sire Ulysses, if I may, me prompted forth; For Fame reports him, by thy prudent aid, Long since the conqu'ror of imperial Troy. Full well we know, where all besides, who fought cians formerly, and the Barbarians also, as well those who inhabited the shores of the continent as the islanders, soon as they became sufficiently skilled in navigation to pass over to each other, inclined to piracy, and were conducted in their expeditions of that sort by the principal men of their country, animated by a desire to enrich themselves and to procure succulence for the weaker. They invaded the inhabitants of unwalled cities and villages, and plundered them, and subsisted chiefly by such acts of rapine, accounting them by no means disgraceful, but rather honourable. To this very day there are some who dwell on the continent of the same opinion; and in the works of the antient poets mariners are universally asked—if they are pirates? the enquirer accounting it no uncivil question, and the answerer never resenting it.—C.

At Ilium, found a miserable end,
But of Ulysses' fate Saturnian Jove
Denies us knowledge; for enquiry gains
No clear report from any, where He died,
If on the continent in battle slain,
Or overwhelm'd by billows of the Deep.
Now, therefore, whether thou beheld'st, thyself,
Ulysses' death, or at some wand'rer's lips
Haft learn'd it, suppliant at thy knees I beg
The sad recital; for no common woes
Were his allotted portion from the womb.
Neither through pity, or o'erstrain'd respect
Flatter me, but explicit all relate
Which thou hast witness'd. If my noble Sire
E'er gratified thee by performance just
Of word or deed at Ilium, where ye fell
So num'rous flain in fight, oh, recollect
Now his fidelity, and tell me true.

Then Neftor thus Gerenian Hero old.
Young friend! since thou remind'st me, by thy suit
Of all the woes which on those hostile shores
We Grecians with such fortitude endured,
Both when, in quest of spoil, we roam'd the Deep
Achilles leading us, and in the siege
Of Priam's royal city, learn the truth—
Then, all the chief Achaians bled and died.
There warlike Ajax lies, there Peleus' son;
There, too, Patroclus, like the Gods themselves
In council, and my son beloved there,
Brave, virtuous, swift of foot, and bold in sight, Antilochus. Nor are these sorrows all;
What tongue of mortal man could all relate?
Should'st thou, abiding here, five years employ
Or fix, enquiring of the woes endured
By the Achaians, ere thou should'st have learn'd
All, thou would'st leave us, weary of the tale.
For stratagems of ev'ry kind nine years
We framed against them, and Saturnian Jove Scarce crown'd the difficult attempt at last*.
There, no competitor in wiles well-plann'd
Ulysses found, so far were all surpaß'd
In shrewd invention by thy noble Sire,
If thou indeed art his, as sure thou art,
Whose fight breeds wonder in me, and thy speech
His speech resembles more than might be deem'd
Within the scope of years so green as thine.
There, never in opinion, or in voice
Illustrious Ulysses and myself

* Longinus has observed that Homer introducing into his Odyssey a variety of facts subsequent to the conclusion of the Iliad, as so many episodes arising out of the war of Troy and its consequences, has rendered it a sort of epilogue to that poem, of which it may with the strictest propriety be termed a second part.—C.
Divided were, but, one in heart, contrived
As best we might, the benefit of all *
But when, Troy's lofty tow'rs in ashes laid,
We thence embark'd, and, by the will of heav'n,
With disunited minds, then Jove ordain'd
Our sorrowful return; for neither wise
Were all, nor righteous, therefore many found
A fate disast'rous through the vengeful ire
Of Jove-born Pallas, who between the sons
Of Atreus sharp contention interposed †
They, unadvisedly, nor less against Just order, summoning by night ‡ the Greeks

* It is a remark of Eustathius that Nestor having first ascribed to Ulysses the honour of surpassing all the Greeks in subdety and ingenuity of contrivance, and following this praise of him with an assertion that they never differed in opinion, compliments, by implication, himself, as much as the hero he celebrates.—C.

† The wrath of Pallas was occasioned, as I believe has been already noted, by the rape which Ajax the Locrian perpetrated on Cassandra in the temple of that Goddess; and she avenged it on all the Grecians, because, permitting the offender to go unpunished, they had all alike connived at the enormity.—B. & C.

‡ Spondanus observes that councils were regularly convened in the morning, and that the poet therefore condemns this, because it was convened at night.—C. But Eustathius, with whom Clarke agrees, is of a different opinion, and alleges that many of Homer's councils, as well as others mentioned by historians, were held, and very properly too, at as late an hour, and that the fault therefore was not that they met at an undue season, but that they met in a state of intoxication.
To council, of whom many came with wine Oppress'd, promulgated the cause for which They had convened the people. Then it was That Menelaus bade the general hoist
Their thoughts bend homeward o'er the sacred Deep,
Which Agamemnon in no sort approved.
His counsel was to stay them yet at Troy,
That so he might assuage the dreadful wrath
Of Pallas, first, by sacrifice and pray'r.
Vain hope! he little thought how ill should speed
That fond attempt; for, once provok'd, the Gods
Are not with ease conciliated again.
Thus stood the brothers, altercation hot
Maintaining, till at length, uprose the Greeks
With deaf'ning clamours, and with diff'ring minds.
We slept the night, but teeming with disgust
Mutual, for Jove great woe prepar'd for all.
At dawn of day we drew our gallies down
Into the sea, and, hasty, put on board
The spoils and female captives. Half the hoist toxicatio. But though it might be lawful in a case of emergency to assemble in the evening or even in the night, may not the poet censurate them for having done it on this occasion, when, for aught that appears, there was no emergency to justify it? If it were lawful to differ from two such authorities, I should not hesitate to say that Spandonus is in the right. In time of battle commanders may be supposed sober at any hour, but not in an evening when there is no enemy to disturb them.

With
With Agamemnon, son of Atreus, chief Commander, tarried, and, embarking, half Pusli'd forth. Swift course we made, for God before
Our gallant barks made smooth the monstrous Deep.
At Tenedos arriv'd, we there perform'd
Oblation to the Gods, ardent to reach
Our native land; but unpropitious Jove,
Not yet designing our arrival there,
Involv'd us in diffention yet again.
For all the crews attendant on the King
Thy noble Sire, to gratify our Chief,
The son of Atreus, chose a diff'rent course,
And steer'd their oary barks again to Troy.
But I, assured that evil from the Gods
Impended, gath'ring all my gallant fleet,
Fled thence in haste, and warlike Diomede
Exhorting his attendants, also fled.
At length, the Hero Menelaus join'd
Our fleets at Lesbos; there he found us held
In deep deliberation on the length
Of way before us, whether we should steer
Above the craggy Chios to the isle
Pyria, that island holding on our left,
Or under Chios by the wind-swept heights
Of Mimas. Then we ask'd from Jove a sign,
And by a sign vouchsafed he bade us cut
The wide sea to Eubœa sheer athwart,
So soonest to escape the threat'ned harm.
Shrill fang the rising gale, and with swift prows
Cleaving the sithy flood, we reach'd by night
Geraëtus; where arrived, we burn'd the thighs
Of num'rous bulls to Neptune, who had safe
Conducted us through all our perilous course.
The fleet of Diomede in safety moor'd
On the fourth day at Argos; but myself
Held on my course to Pylus, nor the wind
One moment thwarted us, or died away,
When Jove had once commanded it to blow*.

Thus, uninform'd, I have arrived, my son!
Nor of the Grecians, who are saved have heard,
Or who have perish'd; but what news soe'er
I have obtain'd since my return, with truth
I will relate, nor aught conceal from thee.

The warlike Myrmidons, as rumour speaks,
By Neoptolemus, illustrious son
Of brave Achilles led, have safe arrived;

* Lesbos was a Trojan island in which were five cities—Pyrrha, Eressus, Mitylene, Methymna, and Antissa. Chios lay between Pirria and Mimas. Pirria was a small narrow island at no great distance from Chios, and had an harbour where ships that had suffered in the Aegean sea took shelter. Mimas was a promontory opposite to Chios, which had its name from Mimas one of the Giants; and Geraëtus was a port of Eubœa. —B. & C.
Safe, Philoctetes also, son renown'd
Of Pæas; and Idomeneus at Crete
Hath landed all his followers who survive
The bloody war; the waves have swallow'd none.
Ye have yourselves doubtless, although remote,
Of Agamemnon heard, how he return'd,
And how Ægisthus cruelly contrived
For him a bloody welcome, but himself
Hath with his own life paid the murth'rous deed.
Good, therefore, is it, when, the father slain,
A son survives him; since, although a youth,
Orestes hath avenged his glorious Sire,
Slaying Ægisthus by whose arts he died.
And Thou, my youthful friend, whose form robust
And fair proportions with delight I view,
Be Thou brave also, that renown like His
Thou may'st acquire with ages yet to come.

To whom Telemachus, discreete, replied.
Oh Nestor! Neleus' son! The pride of Greece!
And righteous was that vengeance; his renown
Achaia's sons shall far and wide diffuse,
To future times transmitting it in song.
Ah! would that such ability the Gods
Would grant to me, that I, as well, the deeds Might punish of our suitors, whose excess Enormous, and whose bitter taunts I feel.

Continual,
Continual, object of their subtle hate.
But not for me such happiness the Gods
Have twined into my thread; no, not for me
Or for my father. Patience is our part.

To whom Gerenian Nestor thus replied.
Young friend! (since thou remind'st me of that theme)
Fame here reports that num'rous suitors haunt Thy palace for thy mother's sake, and there
Much evil perpetrate in thy despite.
But say, endur'st thou willingly their acts
Imperious, or because the people, sway'd
By some response oracular, incline
Against thee? But who knows? the time may come
When to his home restored, either alone,
Or aided by the force of all the Greeks,
Ulysses may avenge the wrong; at least,
Would Pallas thee so favour as, of late,
Ulysses, in the fatal field of Troy;
(For never such apparent aid I saw Giv'n by the Gods, as to thy Father there)
Would but the Goddesses to thyself extend Like fond solicitude, some few of those Should dream, perchance, of wedlock never more.

Then answer thus Telemachus return'd.
Oh Nestor! never shall I see fulfill'd
That word of thine; it passes all belief,
All hope, and overwhelms me with amaze;
No—were I conscious that the Gods themselves
Such Good design'd me, I should yet despair.

But him the blue-eyed Goddess thus reproved.
Telemachus! what word was that which leap'd
The iv'ry guard that should have fenced it in*?
A God, so willing, could with utmost ease
Save any man, howe'er remote. Myself
Far happier should esteem a late return
After much sorrow, to my native home,
Than to arrive there only to be slain,
Like Agamemnon, whom his faithless wife
And her adult'er flew; but mortal man
Once seized by Fate, must perish; nor the Gods Themselves can save him, love him as they may.

To whom Telemachus, discrete, replied.
Howe'er it interest us, let us leave
This question, Mentor! He, I am assured,
Returns no more, but hath already found
A sad, sad fate by the decree of heav'n.
But I would now interrogate again
Nestor, and on a different theme, for him

* "*Ερως ἀδιότως. Prior alluding to this expression, ludicrously renders it

"When words like these in vocal breath
"Burft from his twofold hedge of teeth."
In human rights I judge, and laws expert,
And in all knowledge beyond other men;
For he hath govern'd, as report proclaims,
Three generations; therefore in my eyes
He wears the awful impress of a God.
Oh Neftor, son of Neleus, tell me true;
The means, the manner of Atrides' death—
Relate them—Where, in that tremendous hour,
Was Menelaus? By what cruel stroke Contrived Aegisthus, subtle as he was,
To slay so much a nobler than himself?
Had not the brother of the Monarch reach'd Achaian Argos yet, but, wand'ring still
In other climes, by his long absence gave Aegisthus courage for that bloody deed*

Whom answer'd the Gerenian Chief renown'd.
My son! I will inform thee true; mean-time
Thy own suspicions border on the fact.
Had Menelaus, Hero amber-hair'd,

* Euhathius, remarking on this passage, says that you cannot gratify an old man more than by asking him many questions, even when you feel yourself but little interested in his answers; and Macrobias, making the same observation, quotes this passage in support of it, to which he adds another from Virgil, where Aeneas, to flatter the ancient Etranger's propensity to talk, is as inquisitive as Telemachus here.
Ægilthus found alive at his return
From Ilium, never on his bones the Greeks
Had heap'd a tomb, but dogs and rav'ning fowls
Had torn him lying in the open field
Far from the town, nor him had woman wept
Of all in Greece, for heinous was his crime*.
But we, in many an arduous task engaged,
Lay before Ilium; he, the while, secure
Within the green retreats of Argos, found Occasion apt by flatt'ry to delude
The spouse of Agamemnon; she, at first,
(The royal Clytemnestra) firm refused
The deed dishonourable (for she bore
A virtuous mind, and at her side a bard
Attended ever, whom the King, to Troy Departing, had appointed to the charge†.)
But when the Gods, that he might perish, form'd

* We learn from Xenophon that the Athenians had a law among them according to which no traitor or person guilty of sacrilege, once duly convicted, was allowed the rites of burial.—C.
† The poets of antient times, says Athenaeus, were not only esteemed as such, but as philosophers also. Therefore, Agamemnon at his departure for Troy, entrusted his wife to the care of such a one, whose office it was to inspire her with an ambition to excel in the performance of all female duties, and to divert her attention from trivial and criminal topics by strains of pleasant and instructive poetry. Nor could Ægilthus with all his seductive practices prevail to alienate Clytemnestra from the paths of virtue and honour, till he had first dispos'd of the bard by banishing him to a desart island.—C.
The snare which caught Ægisthus, he convey'd
The bard into a desart isle remote,
Where leaving him to rav'mous birds a prey,
The Queen he led, not willing less than he,
To his own mansion. Num'rous thighs he burn'd
On all their hallow'd altars to the Gods,
And hung with tap'firy, images, and gold
Their shrines, his great exploit past hope achiev'd.
We (Menelaus and myself) had failed
From Troy together, but when we approach'd
Suniium, headland of th' Athenian shore,
There Phoebus, sudden, with his gentle shafts
Slew Menelaus' pilot while he steer'd
The volant bark, Phrontis, Onetor's son,
A mariner past all expert, whom none
In steerage match'd, what time the tempest roar'd.
Here, therefore, Menelaus was detained,
Giving his friend due burial, and his rites
Funereal celebrating, though in haste
Still to proceed. But when, with all his fleet
The wide sea traversing, he reach'd at length
Malca's lofty foreland in his course,
Rough passage, then, and perilous he found.
Shrill blast's the Thund'rer pour'd into his sails,
And wild waves sent him mountainous. His ships
There scatter'd, some to the Cydonian coast.
Of Crete he push'd, near where the Jardan flows.
Beside the confines of Gortyna stands,
Amid the gloomy flood, a smooth rock, steep
Toward the sea, against whose leftward point
Phæstus, the Southwind rolls the sea amain,
Whose mighty surf the rock, though small, repels *.
Hither with part he came, and scarce the crews Themselves escaped, while the huge billows broke
Their ships against the rocks; but five were driv'n
By winds and waves to the Ægyptian shore.

Thus he, provision gath'ring as he went
And gold abundant, roam'd to distant lands
And nations of another tongue. Mean-time,
Ægisthus these enormities at home
Devising, flew Atrides, and supreme Ruled the subjected land; sev'n years he reign'd
In opulent Mycenæ, but the next,
To Him an evil year, from Athens brought Oreftes home, and young Oreftes slew (Glorious revenge!) the slayer of his Sire.
Oreftes, therefore, the funereal rites
Performing to his shameless mother's shade

* The waves excited by the South would have deprived Phæstus of its haven, had not the rock here mentioned made the water smooth within, receiving the billows first and breaking the force of them.—B. & C.
And to her lustful paramour, a feast
Gave to the Argives; on which self-same day
The warlike Menelaus, with his ships
All treasure-laden to the brink, arrived.

And thou, young friend! from thy forsaken home
Rove not long time remote, thy treasures left
With inmates proud as they; left, much consumed,
They share the remnant, and thy voyage thence
In quest of tidings prove a fruitless toil.
But hence to Menelaus is the course
To which I counsel thee; for he hath come
Of late from distant lands, whence none could hope
A safe return, whom storms had first compell'd
To plough the billows of so wide a sea;
A gulph so vast, that not the birds of heav'n
From side to side might pass it in a year.
Go, then, with ship and shipmates, or if more
The land delight thee, steeds thou shalt not want
Or chariot, and my sons shall be thy guides
To noble Lacedemon, the abode
Of Menelaus; ask from him the truth,
Who will not lie, for he is passing wise.

While thus he spake, the sun declined, and night
Approaching, blue-eyed Pallas interposed.

Oh antient King! well hast thou spoken all.
But now delay not. Cut ye forth the tongues,

And
And mingle wine, that (Neptune first invoked
With due libation, and the other Gods)
We may repair to rest; for even now
The sun is sunk, and it becomes us not To make a banquet sacred to the Gods
Exceed the limits of a sober hour*.

So spake Jove's daughter; they obedient heard.
The heralds, then, pour'd water on their hands,
And, filling high the cups, attendant youths
Served them from right to left. Next all the tongues
They cast into the fire, and ev'ry guest
Arising, pour'd libation to the Gods.
Libation made, and all with wine sufficed, Godlike Telemachus and Pallas both
Would have return'd, incontinent, on board,
But Nestor urged them still to be his guests.

Jove and the Gods forbid that ye should seek Your galley now, me leaving as a wretch
Necessitous and wanting couch-attire,
Rugs and warm mantles for the soft repose
Of me and of my guests, for I possess
Large stores of each; nor shall Ulysses' son

* It is said to have been customary in the days of Homer, when the Greeks retired from a banquet to their beds, to cut out the tongues of the victims, and offer them to the Gods in particular who presided over conversation.—B. & C.

Hence
Hence to a galley's deck for sleep retire
While Nestor lives; and, dying, may I leave
An offspring ever prompt to entertain
The worthy guest, come hither who so may.

To whom the Goddess of the azure eyes.

Old Chief! thou hast well said, and reason bids Telemachus thy kind commands obey.

Let him attend thee hence, that he may sleep
Beneath thy roof; but I return on board Myself, to instruct my people, and to give All needful orders; for among them none
Is old as I, but they are youths alike,

Coevals of Telemachus, with whom

They have embark'd for friendship's sake alone.

I therefore will repose myself on board
This night, and to the Caucons* bold in arms

Will fail tomorrow, to demand arrears
Long time unpaid, and of no small amount.

But, since he is become thy guest, afford
My friend a chariot, and a son of thine

Who shall direct his way, nor let him want
Of all thy steeds the swiftest and the best.

The Goddess said, and, in an eagle's form

Flew swiftly thence. Amazement at the sight

* According to the Scholiast a people of Arcadia,—B. & C. but according to Strabo a people dwelling in the country of the Epeans.—C.
Seized all beholders; hoary Nestor, fill'd
With wonder, gazed, and grasping, as he stood,
The hand of young Telemachus, exclaim'd.

Nor didst thou, my friend! nor prone to fear
Shalt prove hereafter, whom the Gods attend
Thus early; for of all th' Olympian Pow'rs
None other, now, than Pallas have we seen,
Jove's awful daughter, who with honour crown'd,
So oft, thy father, where the Greeksians fought.

But thou, O Queen! compassionate us all,
Myself, my sons, my comfort; give to each
A glorious name, and I to thee will give
For sacrifice an heifer of the year,
Untamed, gall'd never by the pond'rous yoke,
And will incase her horns with hammer'd gold.

So Nestor pray'd, whom Pallas gracious heard.
Then the Gerenian warrior old, before
His sons and sons-in-law, to his abode Magnificent proceeded; they (arrived Within the splendid palace of the King)
On thrones and couches sat in order ranged,
Whom Nestor welcom'd, charging high the cup
With wine of richest sort, which she who kept
That treasure, now, in the eleventh year
First broach'd, unsealing the delicious juice.
With this the hoary Senior fill'd a cup,
And to the daughter of Jove ægis-arm'd
Pouring libation, offer'd fervent pray'r.

When all had made libation, and no wish
Remain'd of more, then each to rest retired,
And Nestor the Gerenian warrior old
To a carved couch led forth Ulysses' son
In his own founding portico prepared.
Beside him he bade sleep the spearman bold,
Pisistratus, a gallant youth, the sole
Unwedded in his house of all his sons.
Himself in the interiour palace lay,
Where couch and splendid cov'ring for his use
Provided by the confort Queen he found.

But when Aurora, daughter of the dawn,
Had tinged the East, arising from his bed,
Gerenian Nestor issued forth, and sat
Before his palace-gate on the white stones
Resplendent as with oil, on which of old
His father Neleus had been wont to sit,
In council like a God; but he had fought,
By destiny dismiss'd long since, the shades.
On those stones therefore, guardian of the Greeks
Sat Nestor now, his sceptre in his hand,
And thither from their chambers also came,
'1' encircle him around, his num'rous sons,
Aretus,
Aretus, Stratius, Perseus, Echephrhon,
And godlike Thrasymedes; after whom Came, sixth and last, Pisistratus. Beside Their antient Sire, Telemachus they placed,
And the Gerenian Hero thus began.

Be quick, my sons! to serve me; for in haste
I would propitiate of all Pow'rs above
Minerva first, of whose arrival here
To share our hallow'd feast, no doubt remains.

Seek, One, in haste the pasture, and command
The herdsman that he drive an heifer home;
Another—from his bark bring all the friends
Of young Telemachus, save only two;
And let a third find, instantly, the smith
Laerceus, that he come to enwrap with gold
The victim’s horns. Abide ye here, the rest,
And bid my female train (for I intend A banquet) with all diligence provide Seats, stoves of wood, and water from the rock.

He said, whom instant all obey’d. The ox
Came from the field, and from the gallant ship
The ship-mates of the brave Telemachus;
Next, charged with all his implements of art,
His mallet, anvil, pincers, came the smith
To give the horns their gilding; also came

Pallas
Pallas herself to her own sacred rites*. Then Neflor, hoary warrior, furnish’d gold, Which, hammer’d thin, the artist wrapp’d around.

The victim’s horns, that seeing him attired So costly, Pallas might the more be pleased. Stratus and brave Echephon introduced.

The victim by his horns; Arctus brought A laver, in one hand, with flow’rs embois’ed, And in his other hand a basket store’d With cakes, while warlike Thrasyomedes, arm’d With his long-hafted axe, prepared to finite The ox, and Perseus to receive the blood. The hoary Neflor consecrat’d first Both cakes and water, and with earnest pray’r To Pallas, gave the forelock to the flames.

When all had pray’d, and firew’d with crumbled cakes The heifer o’er, then, hastening to his work, The godlike Thrasyomedes with his axe

Her tough neck-tendons fever’d, and she fell.

* The Antients observed it as a constant practice, to make an offering to the Gods at the beginning of a feast, and to pour libation at the end of it, that the company persuaded that the Gods, though unseen, were personally present, might abstain from all those outrages into which the occasion might otherwise betray them.—C. At those tables of ours where Grace is said, the effect is much better insured, if it be not used merely as an unmeaning ceremony.
At once, the daughters of the Pylian King,
His sons' fair consorts, and the consort Queen,
Daughter first-born of Clymenus, the chaste
Eurydice, with mingled voices thrill
Upbent their suppliant wailings to the skies.
The royal youths then raising from the ground
The heifer's head, sustain'd it, while she pour'd
Her ebbing life's last current, in the throat
Pierced by Pisistratus, the Prince of men.
Soon as the fable blood had ceased, and life
Had left the victim, spreading him abroad,
With nice address they parted at the joint
His thighs, and wrapp'd them in the double cawl,
Which with crude slices thin they overspread.
The hoary King, himself, with incense strew'd
The flaming brands, and pour'd libation forth
Of fable wine, while, ranged on either side,
The Princes held the spits. The thighs consumed,
They ate the interior part, then, slicing thin
The remnant, pierced and held it to the fire.
Mean-time the youngest of the daughters fair
Of Nestor, beauteous Polycaste, laved,
Anointed, and in vest and tunick clothed
Telemachus, who, so refresh'd, stepp'd forth
From the bright laver graceful as a God,
And took his seat at antient Neftor's side.
The viands dress'd, and from the spits withdrawn,
They sat to share the feast, and princely youths
Arising, gave them wine in cups of gold.
When neither hunger now nor thirst remain'd Unsated, thus Gerenian Neftor spake.

My sons, arise! lead forth the sprightly steeds,
And yoke them, that Telemachus may go.

So spake the Chief, to whose command his sons Obedient, yoked in haste the rapid steeds,
And he who held in charge his household stores,
Within the chariot wine and bread disposed,
With viands, such as regal state requires.
Telemachus into the chariot first Ascended, and beside him, next, his place Pisistratus the son of Neftor took,
Then seiz'd the reins, and lash'd the courfers on.
They, nothing loth, sprang swiftly forth, and soon
The lofty tow'rs of Pylus left remote.
Thus, journeying, they shook on either side

* The strict morality and modesty of the Antients may be fairly enough inferred from the custom of employing young women to perform this office for strangers young as themselves. Had the consequences been such as we should have reason to apprehend from the same practice here, it would either never have obtained so universally as it did in Greece, or would quickly have been discontinued.
The yoke all day, and when the setting sun
To dusky evening had resign'd the roads,
At Pheræ they arrived, and at the house
Where dwelt Diocles, whose illustrious Sire
Orsilochus from Alpheus sprang, reposèd.

But when Aurora, daughter of the dawn,
Look'd rosy forth, then, binding to the yoke
Their steeds again, they mounted. Nestor's son
Urged through the vestibule and sounding porch
His coursers, of themselves not slack to go.
A corn-invested land* receiv'd them next,
And there they brought their journey to a close,
So rapidly they sped; and now the sun
Went down, and even-tide dimm'd all the ways.

* Lacedæmon.
ARGUMENT
OF THE
FOURTH BOOK.

Telemachus, with Pífífratus, arrives at the palace of Menelaus, from whom he receives some fresh information concerning the return of the Greeçians, and is in particular told on the authority of Proteus, that his father is detained by Calypso. The suitors, plotting against the life of Telemachus, lie in wait to intercept him in his return to Ithaca. Penelope being informed of his departure, and of their designs to slay him, becomes inconsolable, but is relieved by a dream sent to her from Minerva.

BOOK IV.

In hollow Lacedæmon's spacious vale Arriving, to the residence they drove
Of royal Menelaus; him they found
In his own palace, all his num'rous friends
Regaling at a nuptial banquet giv'n
Both for his daughter and the prince his son.
His daughter to renown'd Achilles heir
He sent, to whom he had at Troy engaged
To give her, and the Gods now made her his.
With chariots and with steeds he sent her forth
To Phthia's glorious city, where he reign'd.
But to his son he gave a Spartan fair,
Alector's daughter; from an handmaid sprang
That son to Menelaus in his age,
Brave Megapenthes; for the Gods vouchsafed
No child to Helen, after Her who vied
With Venus' self in charms, Hermione*.

Thus all the neighbour princes and the friends
Of noble Menelaus, feasting fat
Within his spacious palace, among whom
A sacred bard sang sweetly to his harp,
While, in the midst, two dancers smote the ground
With measur'd steps responsive to his song.

Sudden, within the vestibule appeared
Those two, Telemachus, illustrious youth,
And Nestor's son. Them, issuing from the hall,
The noble Eteoneus of the train
Of Menelaus, saw; at once he ran
Across the palace to report the news
To his Lord's ear, and, standing at his side,
With eager haste his tidings thus declared.

Oh Menelaus! Heav'n-descended Chief!

* From an handmaid called Teridaë, by whom he had also a son named Nicolaëus.—P. & C.
Two guests arrive, both strangers, but alike
Resembling in their form the sons of Jove.
Say, shall we loose, ourselves, their rapid steeds,
Or hence dismiss them to some other host?

But Menelaus, Hero golden-hair'd,
Indignant answer'd him. Bothe's son!
Thou wast not, Eteoneus, heretofore,
A babbler, who now pratest as a child.
We have ourselves arrived indebted much
To hospitality of other men,
If Jove shall, even here, some pause at last
Of woe afford us. Therefore loose, at once,
Their steeds, and introduce them to the feast.

He said, and, issuing, Eteoneus call'd
The brisk attendants to his aid, with whom He loos'd their foaming coursers from the yoke.
Them first they bound to mangers, which with oats
And mingled barley they supplied, then thrust
'The chariot sidelong to the splendid wall *.
Themselves he, next, into the royal house
Conducted, who with wonder view'd the abode
Of the illustrious Chief; for on all sides
As with the splendour of the sun or moon

* Hesychius tells us, that the Greeks ornamented with much attention the front wall of their courts for the admiration of passangers.
The lofty dome of Menelaus blazed.
Satiate, at length, with wonder at that sight,
They enter'd each a bath, and by the hands
Of maidens laved, and oil'd, and cloth'd again
With shaggy mantles and resplendent vests,
Sat both enthroned at Menelaus' side.
And now a maiden charged with golden ew'rs,
And with argent laver, pouring first
Pure water on their hands, supplied them next
With a bright table, which the maiden, chief
In office, furnish'd plenteously with bread
And dainties, remnants of the last regale.
Then came the few'rs, who with delicious meats
Of all kinds, serv'd them, and with cups of gold,
And Menelaus, greeting each, began.

Eat and rejoice, and when ye shall have shared
Our nuptial banquet, we will, then, inquire
Who are ye both; for, certain, not from those Whose generation perishes are ye,
But rather of some race of sceptred Chiefs

* It is remarked by Athenæus that whoever goes to be entertained at another's table, should not, like a glutton and a wine-bibber, immediately on his entrance take his place in the symposium or banqueting room, but should first employ a reasonable time in viewing and giving due commendation to the house and furniture. A point of good breeding in which it appears that Telemachus and his friend were not deficient.—C.
Heav'n-born; the base have never sons like you.

So saying, he lifted from the board his own
Distinguish'd portion *, and the fatted chine
Gave to his guests; the ready viands placed Before them, they with willing hands affail'd,
And when nor hunger, more, nor thirst they felt,
Telemachus, his head inclining close
To Nestor's son, thus whisper'd his amaze.

Dearest Pylistratus, observe, my friend!
How all the echoing palace with the light
Of brass, and gold of brightest lustre, shines †, Silver and ivory ‡! for radiance such
Th' interior mansion of Olympian Jove
I deem. What wealth, how various, how immense

* Kings and Chiefs and important personages were customarily served with a larger portion than others, not on a supposition that they could eat or had occasion to eat more than guests of inferior rank, but that they might have opportunity to compliment whom they pleased with a part of it.—C.

† This line is thus altered, and the amber discarded from it, in conformity to the learned remark of the Analytical Reviewer, who appeals to Pliny for the existence in those days of such a mixt metal as was called Electrum, or gold containing a fifth part of silver.
But we have no English term by which to express such a metal; I have therefore given the gold the attribute of superior brilliancy ascribed by Pliny to that mixture, and could devise no better expedient.

‡ Ivory was well known to Homer, but he nowhere mentions the elephant.
Is here! astonish'd I survey the sight *

But Menelaus, whisper'd as they were,
His words heard not the less, and thus replied.

No mortal man, my children! may pretend Comparison with Jove; His palace stands
For ever, and His treasures ne'er decay;
But mine, small need hath any man to praise
Or much admire; for, after num'rous toils
And perilous wand'ring o'er the stormy Deep,
In the eighth year, at last I brought them home.
Cyprus, Phœnicia, Sidon, and the shores
Of Egypt, roaming without hope, I reach'd,
In distant Æthiopia thence arrived,
And Lybia, where the lambs their foreheads show
With budding horns defended, soon as yeanc'd †.

* Young persons, who have seen little, are frequently astonished at that which their seniors view with indifference. The wonder expressed by Telemachus is therefore perfectly natural, nor less natural was the contempt for such things expressed by Diogenes and even by Socrates, who professed that the sight of so many laboured and useless bawbles, rather moved their laughter than their admiration.—C. Neither to admire however, nor to despise, seems to be the point at which the judgment ought to stand; for as there is nothing in splendour that ought to captivate or confound the beholder, so there is nothing in suitable and well-placed ornaments that can in reality be ridiculous.

† On account of the heat of the climate their horns are said to produce themselves immediately.—C.
There, thrice within the year the flocks produce;
Nor master, there, nor shepherd ever feels
A dearth of cheese, of flesh, or of sweet milk
Delicious, drawn from udders never dry.
While thus I roam'd collecting wealth from all Those shores, another, aided by the arts
Of his pernicious spouse, of life bereav'd
My brother treacherously and when least
He fear'd to lose it. Therefore little joy
To me results from all that I posses.
Your fathers (be those fathers who they may)
These things have doubtless told you; for immense
Have been my suff'ring's, and I have destroy'd
A palace well inhabited and stored
With precious furniture in ev'ry kind;
Such, that I would to heav'n! I own'd at home
Though but the third of it, and that the Greeks
Who perish'd then, beneath the walls of Troy
Remote from fertile Argos, still survived.
Yet while, sequestr'd here, full oft I mourn
My slaughter'd friends, by turns I soothe my soul

* Doubts have been entertained whether Menelaus does not rather mean to say that he has consumed his own wealth, than that he has destroyed the wealth of Priam. Eustathius, whom Barnes follows, inclines to the former sense, but Madame Dacier deems the latter, which is given here, so plainly intended, that the passage is not in the least degree ambiguous.—C.
With tears shed for them, and by turns I cease,
Yet short, alas! and transient is the pause.
But more than all, though sorrowful for all,
I one deplore, rememb'ring whom, I loathe
My wonted food, nor sleep's soft influence less.
For, of the Greeks, in sufferings or in toils
None match'd Ulysses; but the doom of woe
Was his, and ceaseless sorrow for his sake
Thus long a wand'rer, mine; nor have we learn'd
If still he lives, or have already died.
Him doubtless, old Laertes mourns, and him
Discrete Penelope, nor less his son
Telemachus, born newly when he fail'd.
So saying, he kindled in him strong desire
To mourn his father; at his father's name
Fast fell his tears to ground, and with both hands
He spread his purple cloak before his eyes;
Which Menelaus marking, doubtful fat
If he should leave him to lament his Sire,
Or question him, and tell him all at large.*
While thus he doubted, Helen (as it chanced)
Leaving her fragrant chamber, came, august

* The poet's powers of giving variety to similiar incidents are here noticed by Eustathius. Nestor learns his guests by interrogation, but Menelaus by inference, concluding from the tears shed by the young stranger at the mention of his name, that he can be no other than the son of Ulysses.—C.
As Dian, goddess of the golden bow.
Adraista, for her use, set forth a throne,
Alcippe with soft arras cover'd it,
And Philo brought her silver basket, gift
Of fair Aleandra, wife of Polybus,
Whose mansion in Ægyptian Thebes is rich
In untold treasure, and who gave, himself,
Ten golden talents, and two silver baths
With two bright tripods to the Spartan prince,
Besides what Helen from his spouse receiv'd.
A golden spindle, and a basket wheel'd,
Itself of silver, and its lip of gold.
That basket Philo, her own handmaid, placed
At Helen's side, with flend'rest thread replete,
On which infolded thick with purple wool
The spindle lay. Her foot-stool'd throne she press'd,
And, soon as seated, of her spouse enquired.

Know we, my Menelaus, dear to Jove!
These guests of ours, and whence they have arrived?
Erroneous I may speak, yet speak I must;
In man or woman never have I seen Such likeness to another (wonder-fist
I gaze) as in this stranger to the son
Of brave Ulysses, whom that Hero left
New-born at home, when (thameless as I was)
For my unworthy sake the Greecians failed
To Ilium, with fierce rage of battle fired.

Then Menelaus, thus, the golden-hair'd.
Such likeness in him of Laertes' son
Myself perceive; hands, feet, expressive eyes,
Fair open brows, and locks of kindred hue.
And, even now, when, calling him to mind,
I spake of brave Ulysses, and his toils
Endured for me, his starting tears I mark'd,
Which with his purple cloak he sought to hide.

To whom the son of Nestor thus replied.
Atrides! Menelaus! Chief renown'd!
He is in truth his son, as thou hast said;
But he is modest, and would much himself
Condemn, if, at his first arrival here,
He should loquacious seem and bold to thee,
To whom we listen, captivated by thy voice,
As if some God had spoken. As for me,
Nestor, my father, the Gerenian Chief
Bade me conduct him hither, for he wish'd
To see thee, that some word or deed of thine
Might soothe his sorrow; for what grief soe'er
The son sustains, who finds not at his home

* Gataker in his Adversaria Miscellanea supposes that Helen calling herself κωντεία rather means to disclaim all pretensions to beauty, than to modesty, for that it is not to be imagined that any woman would acknowledge herself impudent and shameless. But Clarke disapproves the criticism.
Father or friend to succour him, with such Telemachus is charged; His father roams,
And none hath he t' avenge him in his stead.

To whom the Hero amber-hair'd replied.

Ye Gods! the offspring of indeed a friend
Hath reach'd my house, of one who hath endured
Full many an arduous conflict for my sake;
And much I purpos'd, had Olympian Jove
Vouchsafed us prosp'rous passage o'er the Deep,
To have receiv'd him with such friendship here
As none beside. In Argos I had then Founded a city for him, and had rais'd
A palace for himself; I would have brought The Hero hither, and his son, with all
His people, and with all his wealth, some town Evacuating for his sake, of those Ruled by myself, and nearest to my own.
Thus situate, we had often interchanged
Sweet converse, nor had other cause at last
Our friendship terminated or our joys,
Than death's black cloud o'ershadowing him or me.
But pleasures pure as those, had envy moved
In Jove himself; who, of Achaia's sons,
Hath intercepted from his native shores
The hapless Laertiades alone.

So saying, he kindled the desire to weep
In ev'ry bosom. Argive Helen wept,
Jove's daughter; wept Telemachus as fast
And Menelaus; nor with tearless eyes
Pisistratus remain'd, who call'd to mind
Antilochus by the illustrious son
Of bright Aurora flain, remembr'ing whom
His speech to Menelaus thus he turn'd *.

Atrides! antient Neftor, when of late
Converting with him we remember'd thee,
Pronounced thee wise beyond all human-kind.
Now therefore, let not even my advice
Displease thee. It affords me no delight
To intermingle tears with my repast,
And soon, Aurora, daughter of the dawn,
Will tinge the orient. Not that I account
The mourner, whomsoever he lament,
Blame worthy, since, to shear the locks and weep,
Is all we can for the unhappy dead.
I also have my sorrow, call'd to mourn
One, not the meanest of Achaia's sons *;

* Antilochus was his brother. The son of Aurora, who slew Antilochus, was Memnon.—B. & C.

† This negative manner of praising is not what it seems to be, a slight and moderate eulogium, but intends the highest, and with that intention has been used by poets and rhetoricians in all ages.
So Homer, in another place, speaking of Hector bruised by Ajax with a stone, ascribes the greatest possible force to the latter when he calls him—not the feeblest of the sons of Greece.
My brother; him I cannot but suppose
To thee well-known, although unknown to me
Who saw him never*; but report proclaims Antilochus superior to the most,
In speed superior, and in seats of arms.
To whom, the Hero of the yellow locks.
Ah my young friend! since nought which thou hast said
Or recommended now, would have disgraced
A man of years maturer far than thine,
(For wise thy father is, and such art thou,
And easy is it to discern the son
Of such a father, whom Saturnian Jove
In marriage both and at his birth ordain'd
To great felicity †; for he hath giv'n
To Nestor gradually to sink at home
Into old age, and, while he lives, to see His sons past others wife, and skill'd in arms)
The grief which seized us suddenly, shall cease.
Come therefore—now to our repast again—

* Because Pisistratus was born after Antilochus had failed to Troy.
† It is the opinion of Dionysius Halicarn: that Homer considered virtue alone as insufficient to happiness; for having represented Nestor and Ulysses as alike in prudence, in fortitude and eloquence, but dissimilar in their lot, Nestor being blest with great prosperity and Ulysses an afflicted wanderer, he calls the former happy, and the latter, with all his mental accomplishments and with all his patience, unfortunate and wretched.—C.
Pour water on our hands, for we shall find,
(Telemachus and I) no dearth of themes
For mutual converse when the morrow comes.
He ended; then, AΣhalion, at his word,
Servant of glorious Menelaus, poured
Pure water on their hands, and they the feast
Before them with keen appetite aflail'd.
But Helen, Jove's fair daughter, to compose
Their troubled spirits, with a sudden hand
Infused into the wine of which they drank
A drug most potent to suppress or grief
Or anger, and oblivion to induce
Of all past evil *. Whosoe'er his wine
So medicated drinks, he will not bathe
His cheek all day with trickling tears, although His father and his mother both were dead,
Nor even though his brother or his son
Had fall'n in battle, and before his eyes.
Such drugs of sov'reign use had Helen brought Erewhile to Sparta, Polydamna's gift,
Wife of Α'gyptian Thone; for Α'gypt teems

* Plutarch, Macrobius, and Eulalthus, were all of opinion that by this drug we are to understand not what the word imports, a medicine, but the discourse of Helen so admirably calculated to interest and to console Telemachus.—C. But how she can be said to have fetched that discourse from Α'gypt, these learned expositors and lovers of allegory have not told us.
With drugs of various pow’rs; salubrious some
With wine received, and some of deadliest kind,
Nor dwells on earth a race that may pretend,
In healing arts equality with them,
For they are genuine sons of Pæon, all*. That drug infused, she bade her servant pour
The bev’rage forth, and thus her speech resumed.

Atrides! Menelaus! dear to Jove!
These guests of ours are also nobly born,
But good or evil is the lot of man
As Jove ordains, sole arbiter of each.
Now therefore, feating at your ease reclined,
Listen with pleasure, for myself, the while,
Will matter reasonable interpose.
I cannot all rehearse, nor even name,
(Omitting none) the conflicts and exploits
Of brave Ulysses; but with what address
Successful, one achievement he perform’d
At Ilium, where Achaia’s sons endured
Such hardship, will I speak. Inflicting wounds Dishonourable on himself, he took A tatter’d garb, and like a serving-man

* Pæon was the physician of the Gods, and not the same with Apollo, as Hesiod testifies.

Εἰ μὴ Ἀπόλλων Φώκις ὑπ’ ἐκ θησαύρος σάμων, Ἡ δὲ Ἐνυς Παιών, ὡς ἀντίτης φάρμακα οἶδι.—B. & C.
Enter'd the spacious city of our foes*
So clad, although of nobler port than He Might none be found, when in the camp of Greece,
Some mendicant he seem'd. In such disguise
He enter'd Ilium's gate. There, all alike
Misdeem'd him; me alone he not deceived
Who challeng'd him, but, shrewd, he turn'd away.
But bathed, at length, anointed and attired
At my command, and by a solemn oath
Of mine assured, that not a Trojan there Should learn him for Ulysses, taught by me,
Till he had reach'd, secure, the camp again,
He told me all the counsel of the Greeks.
Thus, many a Trojan slaughter'd, he rejoin'd Achaia's host, full-fraught, for future use,
With wise remark on all that he had seen†.
Then, wail'd the Trojan women, but delight
My bosom fill'd, for with an alter'd heart

* Some say that he engaged in this enterprize to procure himself an opportunity to measure the walls of Troy; others, that he might persuade Helen to cooperate with the Grecians.—B. & C.
† He might inform the Greeks, according to Eustathius, of his success with Helen, how he had prevailed to win her to their interests, of the Trojan counsels also, and of the dimensions of the walls, especially of the gate to which he intended to adapt the size of the wooden horse. It is not improbable likewise that on this occasion he contrived to carry off the Palladium.—C.

§† is translated here in the sense given it by Dacier.—C.
I, now, regretted my forfaken home,
And mourn'd the fatal crime, to which impell'd
By Venus, I had sought a distant shore,
Leaving my daughter, and my rightful Lord,
Although in feature, form, and mind, a Prince
Uncensurable, and from blemish free.

Her answer'd then the Hero golden-hair'd.
Helen! thou hast well spoken. All is true.
I have the talents fathom'd and the minds
Of num'rous Heroes, and have travell'd far,
Yet never saw I with these eyes in man
Such firmness as the calm Ulyfles own'd;
None such as in the hollow horse he proved,
Where all our bravest fat, designing woe
And bloody havock for the sons of Troy*.
Thou thither cam'ft, incited, as it seem'd,
By some Divinity, propitious more
To Troy than to the Greeks, and on thy steps Waited Deiphobus†. Thrice round about
Thou did'lt encompass, and with curious hand

* Homer, says Quintilian, when he tells us that the Grecians sat in the horse, gives us in one word an idea of its magnitude, as Virgil does of its height, when he tells us that they let themselves down from it by a rope.—C.

† Deiphobus is said to have accompanied her, that if any one spoke to her from within the horse, he might know it; not choosing to trust Her for the discovery of it.—C.

Try
Try the huge ambush, founding forth, the while,
The names of all our Leaders, with the voice
Well counterfeited of the wife of each.
Tydides, and Ulysses, and myself
Among the midmost seated, heard the call.
We, starting both, had either left at once
Our close concealment, or, at least, replied,
But more discrete Ulysses interposed
Firm hindrance, and controll'd the rash desire.
Now, therefore, all were quiet, save alone
Anticleus, still impatient to reply.
But, pressing with both hands his op'ning lips
Ulysses saved us; for the close constraint
He still enforced, till Pallas led thee thence.

Then thus, discrete, Telemachus replied.
Atrides! Menelaus! prince renown'd!
Hard was his lot, whom these rare qualities
Preserved not, neither had his dauntless heart
Been iron, had he 'scaped his cruel doom.
But haste, and with dismission to repose
Now needful, gratify my friend and me.

He ceas'd; then Argive Helen gave command
To her attendant maidens to prepare Beds in the portico with purple rugs
Resplendent, and with arras, overspread,
And cover'd warm with cloaks of shaggy pile.

VOL. III.
Forth went the maidens, bearing each a torch,
And in the vestibule their beds prepar'd.
Then came an herald who conducted forth
The weary guests, and, there, the noble son
Of Nestor slept, and, there, his youthful friend
Télémachus; but in the interior house
Atrides, with the loveliest of her sex
Beside him, Helen of the sweeping stole.
But when Aurora, daughter of the dawn,
Glow'd in the East, then from his couch arose
The warlike Menelaus, fresh attired;
His faulchion o'er his shoulders slung, he bound
His sandals fair to his unfulfilled feet,
And, godlike, issuing from his chamber, sat
Beside Télémachus, and thus began.

Hero! Télémachus! what urgent cause
Hath hither led thee, to the land far-famed
Of Lacedæmon o'er the spacious Deep?
Publick concern or private? Tell me true*.

To whom Télémachus discrete replied.
Atrides! Menelaus! prince renown'd!
News seeking of my Sire, I have arrived.
My household is devour'd, my fruitful fields
Are desolated, and my palace fill'd

* Menelaus puts this question to Télémachus, knowing that Píthámtitus came only as his companion.—C.
With enemies, who while they mutual wage
Proud competition for my mother's love,
My flocks unsparing slaughter, and my beeves.
Now, therefore, whether thou beheld'st, thyself,
Ulysses' death, or at some wand'rer's lips
Haft learn'd it, suppliant at thy knees I beg.
The sad recital; for no common woes
Were his allotted portion from the womb.
Neither through pity or o'erstrain'd respect
Flatter me, but explicit all relate
Which thou haft witness'd. If my noble Sire
E'er gratified thee by performance just
Of word or deed at Ilium, where ye fell
So num'rous slain in fight, oh recollect
Now his fidelity, and tell me true!

Then Menelaus, fighing deep, replied.
Gods! their ambition is to reach the bed
Of a brave man, however base themselves.
But as it chances, when the hart hath lay'd
Her fawns new-yean'd and sucklings yet, to rest
Within some dreadful lion's gloomy den,
She roams the hills, and in the grassy vales
Feeds heedless, till the lion, to his lair
Returning, rends them both; with such a force
Refiilless fhall Ulysses them destroy.
Jove, Pallas and Apollo! oh that such As erst in well-built Lesbos, where he threw Philomelides in a wrestling-match
With mighty force, when all the Greeks rejoiced,
Such, now, Ulysses might afflict them all!
Short life and bitter nuptials should be theirs *
But now, such answer as with earnest suit
Thou hast implored, direct and true, receive;
For I will nought conceal, but will impart
All that the antient Prophet of the Deep +
Hath taught me, with exactest truth to Thee.

The Gods, resenting my neglect to pile
Their altars high with hecatombs, detain'd
Me still in Ægypt, anxious to return,
For just observance of their high behests Alone can please the Gods. There is an isle
Amid the billowy flood, Pharos by name,
In front of Ægypt, distant from her shore
Far as a vessel by a sprightly gale

* By Philomelides some have rather absurdly supposed Patroclus, whose mother's name was Philomela, to be intended. But Homer never forms his patronymies from the mother's side, and why should the Greeks exult in the fall of an amiable man whom all respected. The person in question is therefore more probably affirmed by others to have been the King of Lesbos, whose custom being to challenge all comers, he challenged, on their arrival in his island, the Grecians also.—C.

† Proteus.
Impell'd, may push her voyage in a day.
It owns a quiet port, and many a ship
Finds wat'ring there from riv'lets on the coast.
There me the Gods kept twenty days, no breeze
Propitious granting, that might sweep the waves,
And usher to her home the flying bark.
And now had our provision, all consumed,
Left us exhausted, but a certain nymph Pitied and saved me. Daughter fair was she
Of mighty Proteus, Antient of the Deep,
Idothea named; her most my sorrows moved;
She found me wandering alone, remote
From all my followers, who around the isle
The fishes snaring roamed, by famine urged,
And standing at my side, me thus bespake.

Stranger! Thou, sure, art childish, or of heart
Dull and insensible, or thy delight
Is in distress and mis'ry. Wherefore, else,
Within these island-limits art thou pent
Thus long, nor end hast found of ling'ring here,
Where famine wastes thy people day by day?

* In the heroick ages the distance might be such; though now by the accumulation of soil from the mouth of the Nile, it is united to the land, or nearly so.—B. & C.

† Idothea is said to have been enamoured of Canobus, the pilot of Menelaus.—B.
So spake the Goddess, and I thus replied.
I tell thee, whosoever of the Pow'rs
Divine thou art, that I am prison'd here
Not willingly, but must have, doubtless, sinn'd
Against the deathless tenants of the skies.
Yet say (for the Immortals all things know)
What God detains me, and my course forbids
Hence to my country o'er the fishy Deep?
I spake; when thus the Goddess all-divine.
Hear me, for all that I relate is true.
A faithful seer, the Antient of the Deep,
Immortal Proteus, the Aegyptian, haunts
These shores, familiar with all Ocean's gulphs, Neptune's attendant ever, and esteem'd
My father. Him if thou art able once
To seize and bind, he will prescribe the course
With all its measured distances, by which Thou shalt regain secure thy native shores.
He will, moreover, at thy suit declare,
Thou favour'd of the skies! what good, what ill
Hath in thine house befall'n, while absent thou
Thy voyage difficult perform'd and long*.

She

* "O, τί τα ἐν μεγάλωι κακῶς συναθέν τε τίτυρες.
What good and what evil hath befallen thee in thy house.
Socrates a. Cellius says, accounted this line of Homer his dearest and best treasure, and declared that it comprises the sum total of philosophy.
She spake, and I replied—Thyself reveal
By what effectual bands I may secure
The antient Deity marine, left, warn'd
Of my approach, he shun me and escape.
Hard task for mortal hands to bind a God!

Then thus Idothea answer'd all-divine.
I will inform thee true. Soon as the sun
Hath climb'd the middle heav'ns, the prophet old,
Emerging while the breezy zephyr blows,
And cover'd with the scum of ocean, seeks
His spacious cove, in which outstretch'd he lies.
The phocæ* also, rising from the waves,
Offspring of beauteous Halosydna, sleep
Around him, numerous, the fishy scent
Exhaling rank of the unfathom'd flood†.
Thither conducting thee at early dawn
I will dispose thee in some safe recess, philosophy.—C. The line, however, must be detached from the context and have a new sense given it before it can serve the uses to which he applied it. For Homer means simply to say by it, that Proteus would inform Menelaus of all that had happened in his absence; whereas Socrates found in it a hint not to suffer his curiosity to tempt him astray in quest of knowledge more specious than useful, but rather to attend to what was passing at home and in his own heart.—An excellent lesson certainly, but not found here or any where else in Homer.

* Seals, or sea-calves.
† According to Ælian no animal sleeps so sound.—B.
But from among thy followers thou shalt choose
The bravest three in all thy gallant fleet.
And now the artifices understand
Of the old prophet of the sea. His herd
Of phocæ numb'ring first, he will pass through
And sum them all by fives, then lying down
Will sleep as sleeps the shepherd with his flock.
When ye shall see him stretch'd, then call to mind
That moment all your prowess, and prevent,
Howe'er he strive impatient, his escape.
All changes trying, ev'ry reptiles form
On earth he will adopt, and he will seem
A river now, and now devouring fire;
But ye, the more he strives, with added force
Strive also, and constrain him till the more.
And when himself shall question you, restored
To his own form in which ye found him first Reposing, then from farther force abstain;
Then, Hero! loose the Antient of the Deep,
And ask him what Divinity impedes
Thy voyage homeward o'er the fiery flood.
So saying, she plunged into the billowy waste.
I then, in various musings lost, my ships
Along the sea-beach station'd, fought again,
And when I reach'd my galley on the shore
We supped, and, at the fall of dewy night,
On Ocean's side extended, took repose.
But when Aurora, daughter of the dawn,
Look'd rosy forth, beside the spacious Deep Proceeding, first I importuned the Gods
With fervent pray'r, then chose the fittest three For bold assault, and worthiest of my trust.
Mean-while the Goddess deep into the gulphs
Of Ocean plunging, from the bottom brought Four hides, the skins of Phocæ newly slain, Forecasting to deceive her antient Sire.
Four cradles in the sea-sand, next, she scoop'd,
Then waited our approach. We soon arrived;
When, side by side, she lodg'd us, and a skin
Cast over each. But terrible we found
Our ambush, there, so rancid was the scent
And noisome to us all; for who could rest Extended at a soul sea-monster's side?
But she a potent remedy devised
Herself to save us, who applied beneath
Our nostrils sweetest odours of divine
Ambrosia, which the fishy scent subdued.
All morning, patient watchers, there we lay;
And now the num'rous phocæ from the Deep Emerging, slept along the shore, and he
At noon came also, and perceiving there
His fatted monsters, through the flock his course

Took
Took regular, and summ'd them; with the first
He number'd us, suspicion none of fraud
Conceiving, then couch'd also. We, at once,
Loud-shouting flew on him, and in our arms
Constrain'd him fast; nor the sea-prophet old
Call'd not incontinent his shifts to mind.
First he became a long-maned lion grim,
A dragon then, a panther, an huge boar,
A limpid stream, and an o'ershadowing tree.
We persevering held him, till at length
The subtle Sage, his ineffectual arts
Resigning weary, question'd me, and said.
Say, son of Atreus! what confederate Pow'r Assisted thy contrivance to ensnare
And thus constrain me? what is thy desire?
So He; to whom thus answer I return'd.
Oh antient Prophet! guile alone suggests
These questions, for thyself already know'st.
Within these island-limits have I dwelt
Long time, no means discov'ring of escape,
Though famine wastes my people day by day.
Yet say (for the Immortals all things know)
What God detains me, and my course forbids
Hence to my country o'er the fishy Deep?
So I; when thus the old one of the waves.

But
But thy plain duty was to have adored
Jove, first, in sacrifice, and all the Gods,
That then embarking, by propitious gales
Impell'd, thou might'st have reach'd thy country soon.
For thou art destin'd ne'er to see again
Thy friends, thy palace, or thy native shores,
Till thou have reach'd once more the hallow'd flood
Of Ægypt, and with hecatombs adored
Devout, the deathless tenants of the skies.
Then will they speed thee whither thou desir'st.
He ceased. I listen'd with a broken heart,
Thus bidden o'er the gloomy waves again
To Ægypt; voyage long and hard to achieve!
Yet, though in sorrow whirl'd, I thus presum'd.
Old prophet! I will all thy will perform.
But tell me, and the truth without disguise.
Have the Achaians with their ships arrived
All safe, whom Nestor left and I, at Troy?
Hath none of all our heroes, since the siege,
Died prematurely, or, on board his bark,
Or in th' embraces of his friends at home?
I spake, when answer thus the God return'd.

* From the abruptness of this beginning, Virgil, probably, who has copied the story, took the hint of his admired exordium

Nam quis te, juvenum confidentissime, nostras
Egit adire domos?

Atrides,
Atrides, why these questions? Better far
Were ignorance for thee; since, knowing all,
Thou wilt not long, I judge, from tears abstain.²
No few have died, and many still survive
Of those Achaian Chiefs; but Two alone
In their return have perish'd, and a third
Still lives, imprison'd in the boundless Deep.

Ajax, surrounded by his galleys, died.⁵
Him Neptune, first, against the bulky rocks
The Gyræ, drove, but saved him from the Deep;
Nor had he perish'd, hated as he was
By Pallas, but for his presumptuous boast
That Him the Gods themselves should strive in vain
To overwhelm in Ocean's gulphym flood.⁶
Neptune that speech vain-glorious hearing, grasp'd

* Here, it is observed, the poet condemns an importunate curiosity concerning the Future.—B. Certainly it is one of the chief mercies of God to man that he hides it from him.

† Pallas persecuted the Greccians on their return for the reason already mentioned, the rape of Cassandra by the Locrian Ajax. Nor was she even so appeased, but, during a period of a thousand years, compelled the Locrians to send annually a certain number of virgins chosen by lot, to Ilium.—B. & C.

Pliny takes notice of a picture the work of Apollodorus the Athenian, which he had seen at Pergamus, and the subject of which was the Ajax here mentioned struck with thunder.—B. & C.

† The Gyræ were rocks situated very near to the island Myconos, and were so called because they threw the water into whirlpools.—B. & C.
His trident, and the huge Gyraean rock
Smiting indignant, dash'd it half away;
Part stood, and part, on which the boaster sat
When, first, the brain-fick fury seiz'd him, fell,
Bearing him with it down into the gulphs
Of Ocean, where he drank the brine, and died*.
But thy own brother in his barks escaped
That fate, by Juno saved; yet when, at length,
He should have gain'd Malea's craggy shore,
Then, by a sudden tempest caught, he flew
With many a groan far o'er the fishy Deep
To the land's utmost point, where once his home
Thyestes had, but where Thyestes' son
Dwelt then, Ægisithus. There, the Gods appeared
The stormy blast, and, deeming most secure
His passage to Mycenæ thence by land,
He disembark'd. With calm delight he trod
The shore of Argos, kiss'd his native soil,
And, at a fight so welcome, wept for joy.
But not unseen he landed; for a spy,
One whom the shrewd Ægisithus had seduced

* Homer literally interpreted says—so there he died, when he had drunk salt water.—A line which, according to Eustathius, had place in none of the ancient editions, being rejected as too simple, and even trivial.—C. It was once however well chosen for his motto by a physician who wrote a treatise against the internal use of sea-water.

By
By promise of two golden talents, mark'd
His coming from a rock where he had watch'd
The year complete, left, passing unperceived,
The King should reassert his right in arms.
Swift flew the spy with tidings to his Lord,
And He, incontinent, this project framed Insidious. Twenty men, the boldest hearts
Of all the people, from the rest he chose,
Whom he in ambush placed, and others charged
With diligence to spread the feastal board.
With horses, then, and chariots forth he drove Full-fraught with mischief, and, inviting home
The unsuspicuous King, amid the feast
Slew him, as at his crib men slay an ox.
Nor of Atrides' or Ægisthus' train
A man escaped; all perish'd by the sword.

He ceas'd, I heard him with a broken heart,
And on the sands fat weeping; life itself
Now fail'd to please me, and the light of day.
Long time I wept and roll'd me in the dust,
But, sated; ceased at length; when thus his speech
The antient Prophet of the Deep resumed.

Atrides! sit not weeping without end
Or measure here, since remedy thy grief
Will yield thee none, but with thy best dispatch
Strive for deliv'rance and to reach again

Thy
Thy native home; for thou shalt either find Ægithus living, or, if haply, first,
Orestes have avenged his father's death,
At least shalt witness his funereal fires.

He ceas'd, and I, afflicted as I was,
Yet felt my spirit at that word refresh'd,
And in wing'd accents answer thus return'd.

Of these I am inform'd; but name the third
Who, dead or living, in the boundless Deep
Is still detain'd; I dread, yet wish to hear.

So I; to whom thus Proteus in return.
Laertes' son, the Lord of Ithaca—
Him in an island weeping I beheld,
Guest of the nymph Calypso, by constraint
Her guest, and from his native land withheld
By sad necessity; for ships well-oar'd,
Or faithful followers hath he none, whose aid
Might speed him safely o'er the spacious flood.
But, Menelaus! not for Thee thy doom
Has death prepared in Argos—Thee the Gods
Have destin'd to the blest Elysian isles *
Earth's utmost bound'ries; (Rhadamanthus there

* The abode of Heroes after death, so named either from Elusius of Eleutherae, a person of uncommon piety, or because the inhabitants suffer no more dissolution. They were called the happy isles, or the isles of the blessed. —B. & C.
For ever reigns, and there the human kind
Enjoy the easiest life; no snow is there,
No biting winter, and no drenching snow'r,
But zephyr always gently from the sea
Breathes on them, to refresh the happy race
Because that Helen is thy wife, and thee
They deem, for her sake, near allied to Jove.

So saying, he plunged into the billowy waste.
I then, with my brave comrades to the fleet
Return'd, deep-musing as I went, and sad.
No sooner had I reach'd my ship beside
The ocean, and we all had supp'd, than night
From heav'n fell on us, and, at ease repos'd
Along the margin of the sea, we slept.
But when Aurora, daughter of the dawn,
Look'd rosy forth, drawing our galleys down
Into the sacred Deep, we rear'd again
The mast, unfurled the sail, and to our seats
On board returning, thresh'd the foamy flood.
Once more, at length, within the hallow'd stream
Of Ægypt mooring, on the shore I flew Whole hecatombs, and (the displeasure thus Of the Immortal Gods appeas'd) I reared
To Agamemnon's never-dying fame
A tomb, and finishing it, fail'd again
With such a gale from heaven vouchsaf'd, as sent My ships swift-scurrying to the shores of Greece.
But come—eleven days wait here, or twelve
A guest with me, when I will send thee hence
Nobly, and honour’d with illustrious gifts,
With splendid chariot, with three princely sleds,
And with a gorgeous cup, that to the Gods
Libation pouring ever while thou liv’st
From that same cup, thou may’st remember me.

Him, prudent, then answer’d Telemachus.
Atrides! spare to press my longer stay,
For, willing, so delightful is the sound
Of thy recital, I could listen’ning sit
The year entire, rememb’ring neither home
Nor parents more; but my companions, left
In Pylus, deem already my return
Too long delay’d, whom thou wouldst still detain.
What boon so’er thou giv’st me, be it such As I may treasure’d keep; for I will take No sleds to Ithaca, where glory none
They can achieve, as here, for thee, they may.
For thou art Lord of an extensive plain,
Where lotus, herbage of all favours, wheat,
Pulse, and white barley clothe the fruitful soil.

But

* Herodotus says that when the Nile overflows, many lilies grow in the water of a kind which the Egyptians name Lotus; gathering these, they dry them in the sun, and make the fruit into bread
But Ithaca no level champaign owns,
A nursery of goats, and yet a land
Fairer than richest pastures in mine eye.
But none of all our rugged isles affords
Large growth of herbs, or level space to run,
And Ithaca the rudest is of all.

He said; the Hero Menelaus smiled,
And stroaking tenderly his cheek, replied.

Dear youth! thy speech proclaims thy noble blood.
I can with ease supply thee from within
With what shall suit thee better, and the gift
Of all that I possess which most excels
In beauty, and the noblest shall be thine.
I give thee, wrought elaborate, a cup
Itself all silver, bound with lip of gold.
It is the work of Vulcan, which to me
The Hero Phaedimus presented, King
Of the Sidonians, when on my return
His house received me. That shall be thy own *

Thus

which they eat toasted. The root likewise is eatable, has an agreeable sweetness, is round and of the size of an apple.—C.

But according to the Scholiast there was a tree called *Lotus, and a species of grafs also.—B. & C.

* It is doubted whether Phaedimus is here a proper name or an epithet signifying illustrious. They who understand it in the latter sense affirm this illustrious hero, the King of Sidon, to have been Solomon; in support of which opinion Barnes cites the following passage from Clemens Alexandrinus.

Iranus
Thus they conferr'd; and now the busy train
Of menials culinary, at the gate
Of Menelaus, glorious Chief, appear'd *.
They brought him sheep, with heart-ennobling wine,
While all their wives, their brows with frontlets bound,
Came charg'd with bread. Thus busy they prepared
A banquet in the mansion of the King.

Mean-time, before Ulysses' palace gate
The suitors sported with the quoit and spear
On the smooth area, customary scene
Of all their strife and angry clamour loud †.
There fat Antinoës, and the godlike youth
Eurymachus, superiour to the rest

"Iramus or Hiram gave his daughter to Solomon at the time when Menelaus returning from the siege of Troy arrived at Phœnicia."

Sidon was a city of that country.

* Δαιτυπωρ—generally signifies the founder of a feast; but we are taught by Eustathius to understand by it, in this place, the persons employed in preparing it.—C.

The same commentator understands these preparations to be made not in the palace of Menelaus but of Ulysses. It is however in the beginning of the next paragraph, and not before, that the poet conducts us back to Ithaca. This is noticed by Barnes, who terms it a pardonable error indeed, but still worthy to be censured as an error, left the authority of so learned a critic should mislead the reader.

† The quoit was commonly a stone, but was sometimes made of iron, and had a thong tied about the middle of it, by which they swung and cast it. What the translation calls a spear was rather a javelin, such as was used in goat-hunting.—C.
And Chiefs among them, to whom Phronius' son
Noémon drawing nigh, with anxious mien
Question'd Antinoüs, and thus began.

Know we, Antinoüs! or know we not,
When to expect Telemachus at home Again from Pylus? In my ship he went,
Which now I need, that I may cross the sea
To Elis, on whose spacious plain I feed
Twelve mares, each suckling a mule-colt as yet
Unbroken, but of which I purpose one
To ferry thence, and break him into use.

He spake, whom they astonish'd heard; for him
They deem'd not to Néléian Pylus gone,
But, likeliest, to the field, his num'rous flocks
To visit, or the steward of his swine.
Then thus, Eupithes' son, Antinoüs, spake,

Say true. When fail'd he forth? of all our youth,
Whom chose he for his followers? his own train
Of slaves and hirelings? Hath he pow'r to effect
This also? Tell me too, for I would learn—
Took he perforce thy fable bark away,
Or gav'st it to him at his first demand?*?

* The question of Antinoüs, says Barnes, seems to be asked with a malicious intention to betray Noémon into a false accusation of Telemachus, a modest and virtuous prince, whom he affects to consider as one like himself, according to the manner of such profligates
To whom Noëmon, Phronius' son, replied.
I gave it voluntary; what could'st thou,
Should such a prince petition for thy bark
In such distress? Hard were it to refuse.
A band, inferiour to yourselves alone
Attends him forth; and with them I observed
Mentor embarking, ruler o'er them all,
Or, if not him, a God; for such he seem'd.
But this much moves my wonder. Yester-morn
I saw, at day break, noble Mentor here,
Whom shipp'd for Pylus I had seen before.
He ceas'd; and to his father's house return'd;
They, hearing, sat aghast. Their games mean-time
Finish'd, the suitors on their seats reposèd,
To whom Eupithes' son, Antinous, next,
Much troubled spake; a black storm overcharged
His bosom, and his vivid eyes flash'd fire.
Ye Gods, a proud exploit is here achieved,
This voyage of Telemachus, by us
Pronounced impracticable; yet the boy
In rash defiance of us all, is gone,
With a swift bark, and with a chosen crew.
He soon will prove more mischievous, whose pow'r as he. But Noëmon answers honestly and boldly, doing justice to the son of the King his master, and tacitly condemning the suitors' iniquitous treatment of him.

Jove wither, ere we suffer its effects!
But, be ye quick, launch also forth for me
A bark with twenty rowers; close conceal'd Within the narrow frith that sep'rates these
From the rough shores of Samos, will I lurk,
And watch his coming, who shall dearly rue
That e'er he roam'd to seek his wand'ring Sire.

He ceased, and loud applause heard in reply,
With warm encouragement. Then, rising all,
Into Ulysses' house at once they throng'd.
Nor was Penelope left uninformed
Long time of their clandestine plottings deep,
For herald Medon told her all, whose ear
Their councils caught while in the outer-court
He stood, and they that project framed within.
Swift to Penelope the tale he bore,
Who as he pass'd the gate, him thus address'd.

Why, herald! thus in haste? With what command Charged by the suitors? That Ulysses' maids
Their tasks resign, to furnish, at his cost,
The board for them? Here end, for ever end
Their tedious wooing! May ye * never hence

* This transition from the third to the second person belongs to the original, and is considered as a fine stroke of art in the poet, who represents Penelope in the warmth of her resentment, forgetting where she is, and addressing the suitors as if present.
Escape t' assemble at the festive board
Elsewhere, as, here assembling, day by day
Ye have devour'd the substance of my son
The Prince Telemachus! Ye never, sure,
When children, from your parents learn'd, how kind Ulysses, in their days, had ever been,
No wrongs committing, criminating none
Before the people, as the practice is
Of mighty chiefs, who favour without cause,
And without cause discount'nance whom they please.
He no man wrong'd at any time; but ye Proclaim your own ingratitude, and prove His kindness to your parents lost on you.

Then Medon answer thus, prudent, return'd.
Grant Heav'n, oh Queen, that this woe prove the worst!
But greater far and heavier ills than this
The suitors plan, whose counsels Jove confound!
Their base desire and purpose are to slay Telemachus on his return; for he,
To gather tidings of his Sire is gone
To Pylus, or to Sparta's land divine.

He said; and where she stood, her trembling knees
Fail'd under her, and all her spirits went.
Speechless she long remain'd, tears fill'd her eyes,
And inarticulate in its passage died
Her utterance, till at last with pain she spake.
Herald! why went my son? he hath no need
On board swift ships to ride, which are to man
His steeds that bear him over seas remote *
Went he resolved on death, and that his name,
Sunk with himself, should be pronounced no more?

Then answer, thus, Medon the wife return'd,
I know not whether him some God impell'd
Or his own heart to Pylus, there to hear
News of his Sire's return, or by what fate
At least he died, if he return no more.

He said, and traversing Ulysses' courts,
Departed; the, with heart-consuming woe O'erwhelm'd, no longer could endure to take Repose on any of her num'rous seats,
But on the threshold of her chamber-door
Lamenting sat, while all her female train
Around her moan'd, the antient and the young,

* Literally, which are the mariner's horses. The metaphor itself is admired by Eulathius, but not the use of it by Penelope in her present circumstances. Distressed as she is, she ought not to be supposed to have leisure for poetical fancies and the exercise of ingenuity. Virgil errs in like manner, as is observed by Fulvius Urbinus, introducing into the speech of Venus while she laments the sufferings of Æneas, an episodical description of Timavus.

_{et fontem superare Timavi;}
_Unde per ora novem vaso cum murmure montis
_It mare proruptum, et pelago premit arva sonanti._

Æn. I. 248.—C.

Whom
Whom, sobbing, thus, Penelope bespake.

Hear me, ye maidens! for of woman born
Coeval with me, none hath e'er received
Such plenteous sorrow from the Gods as I,
Who first my noble husband left, endued
With courage lion-like, of all the Greeks
The Chief with ev'ry virtue most adorn'd,
A prince all-excellent, whose glorious praise
Through Hellas and all Argos flew diffused,
And now, my darling son,—him I know'd have snatch'd Far hence inglorious, and I knew it not.
Ah treach'rous servants! conscious as ye were
Of his design, not one of you the thought
Conceived to wake me when he went on board.
For had I known his purpose to depart,
He either had not gone (how much soc'er
He wish'd to leave me) or had left me dead.
But haste ye,—bid my antient servant come,
Dolion (whom when I left my father's house
He gave me, and whose office is to attend
My num'rous garden-plants) that he may seek
At once Laertes, and may tell him all;
He may, perchance, some remedy devise,
And, weeping, move the people to withstand
These cruel men, who purpose to destroy
My son, sole offspring of his godlike Sire.
Then thus the gentle Euryclea spake,
Nurse of Telemachus. Alas! my Queen!
Slay me, or spare, deal with me as thou wilt,
I will confess the truth. I knew it all.
I gave him all that he required from me,
Both wine and bread, and, at his bidding, swore
To tell thee naught in twelve whole days to come,
Or till, inquiry made, thou shouldst thyself
Learn his departure; lest thou shouldst impair
Thy lovely features with excess of grief.
But love thyself, and, fresh attired, ascend
To thy own chamber, there, with all thy train,
To worship Pallas, who shall save, thenceforth,
Thy son from death, what ills soe'er he meet.
Add not fresh sorrows to the present woes
Of the old King, for I believe not yet
Arceias' race rejected by the Gods
Wholly, but trust that there shall still be found Among them, who shall, undisturb'd, possess
This palace, with its distant fair domain.
So saying, she hush'd her sorrow, and her eyes
No longer stream'd. Then, bathed and fresh attired, Penelope ascended with her train
The upper palace, and a basket stored
With hallow'd cakes to Pallas off'ring, pray'd.
Hear matchless daughter of Jove ægis-arm'd!
If ever wise Ulysses offer'd here
The thighs of fatted kine or sheep to thee,
Now mindful of his piety, preserve
His darling son, and frustrate with a frown
The cruelty of these imperious guests!

She said, and with thrill voice melodious pray'd,
Whom Pallas heard. And now the spacious hall
And gloomy passages with tumult rang
And clamour of that throng, when thus, a youth
Insolent as his fellows, dared to speak.

Much woo'd and long, the Queen at length prepares
To choose another mate, and nought susists
The bloody death to which her son we doom *

So He; but of his doom they little knew,
And, cautious, thus Antinoüs replied.

Sirs! one and all, I counsel you, beware
Of such bold boasting unadvised; left one O'erhearing you, report your words within.
No—rather thus, in silence, let us move
To an exploit so pleasant to us all.

He said, and twenty chose, the bravest there,
With whom he fought the galley on the shore,
Which haling down to sea, with mast and sails

* Mistaking, perhaps, the sound of her voice, and imagining that she sang.—B.
They furnish'd, and, adjusting, next, their oars
Each to its groove with smoothest leather lined;
Unfurl'd their shining canvas to the gale *
Their bold attendants brought them then their arms
And thrusting forth the galley till she swam,
They moor'd her fast, then went themselves on board,
And supping, waited for the dusk of eve.

But when Penelope, the palace stairs
Remounting, had her upper chamber reach'd,
'There, unrefresh'd with either food or wine,
She lay'd her down, her noble son the theme
Of all her musings, whether he should 'scape
His impious foes, or perish by their hands.
Num'rous as are the lion's thoughts, who sees,
Not without fear, a multitude with toils
Encircling him around, such num'rous thoughts
Her bosom occupied, till sleep at length
Invading her, she sank in soft repose.

Then Pallas, teeming with a new design,
Set forth an airy phantom in the form
Of fair Iphthima, daughter of the brave

* The Scholiast asks, Why do they set up the mast if they purpose to use their oars? and concludes it to be only that the vessel may make the better appearance. But Clarke asks, why might they not use both?

What is here called the groove, the watermen on the Thames call the thole.
Icarius, and Eumelus' wedded wife
In Phereæ *. Shaped like her the dream she sent Into the mansion of the godlike Chief
Ulysses, with kind purpose to abate
The sighs and tears of sad Penelope.
Ent'ring the chamber-portal where the bolt
Secured it, at her head the image stood,
And thus, in terms compassionate, began.

Sleep'st thou, distress'd Penelope? The Gods,
Happy in everlasting rest themselves,
Forbid thy sorrows. Thou shalt yet behold
Thy son again, who hath by no offence
Incurr'd at any time the wrath of heav'n.

To whom, sweet-sluiming in the shadowy gate
By which dreams pass, Penelope replied.

What cause, my sister, brings thee, who art seen
Unfrequent here, for that thou dwell'st remote?
And thou enjoin'st me a cessation too
From sorrows num'rous, and which, fretting, wear
My heart continual; first, my spouse I lost
With courage lion-like endow'd, a prince
All-excellent, whose never-dying praise
Through Hellas and all Argos flew diffused;
And now my only son, new to the toils

* A city of Thessaly, so named from Phereus the founder of it.—B.
And hazards of the sea, nor less untaught
The arts of traffick, in a ship is gone
Far hence, for whose dear cause I sorrow more Than for his Sire himself, and even shake
With terror, lest he perish by their hands
To whom he goes, or in the stormy Deep;
For num'rous are his foes, and all intent
To slay him, ere he reach his home again.

Then answer thus the shadowy form return'd.
Take courage; suffer not excessive dread
To overwhelm thee, for secur'd he goes
By Pallas; a protector so as all
Would wish to gain; for harm can ne'er betide

*Spondanus, though ready to grant every thing to maternal love, accounts the affection shown by Penelope to her husband, in this instance, inferior to the requisitions of the Divine Law as they are urged on us. Yet he allows (but it is an allowance not called for) that the grief of Penelope on account of Ulysses is, if not almost obliterated by time, yet certainly much abated. But there are many reasons, as Barnes observes, to justify her deeper concern for Telemachus on the present occasion, to which, though the poet has mentioned them, Spondanus was not attentive. Telemachus wanted experience, but Ulysses in that respect, as well as in point of uncommon natural sagacity, was eminently qualified to encounter danger. Ulysses, when he went to Troy, was aware of all the hazard of the enterprise, but his son is ignorant that an ambush is set for his life, from which he can hardly escape but by a miracle. And, after all, says Barnes, whether greater conjugal affection than Penelope manifests is required of us or not, certain it is that we see few instances of any like it.

Whom
Whom she defends. In pity of thy woes
She urged me forth, and charged me thus to speak.

Then thus Penelope the wife replied.
Oh! if thou art a Goddess, and hast heard
A Goddess' voice, rehearse to me the lot
Of that unhappy one, if yet he live
Spectator of the cheerful beams of day,
Or if, already dead, he dwell below.

Then answer thus the fading form return'd.
Vain words are evil. Whether he be dead,
Or still alive, rest uninform'd by me.*

So saying, her egress swift beside the bolt
She made, and melted into air. Upsprang
From sleep Icarius' daughter, and her heart Felt heal'd within her, by that dream impress'd Distinctly in the noiseless night serene.

Mean-time the suitors urged their wat'ry way,
To instant death devoting in their hearts
Telemachus. There is a rocky isle
In the mid sea, Samos the rude between
And Ithaca, not large, named Afteris,

* This answer of the phantom, says Eustathius, is dexterously managed; for to have proceeded to tell the whole truth and to have informed her that Ulysses was still alive, would have been incompatible with the sequel, to which it is essential that Ulysses at his return should be unknown to all, but especially to Penelope.—C.
It hath commodious havens, into which
A passagé clear opens on either side,
And there the ambush'd Greeks his coming watch'd *.

* The concluding lines of this Book have been altered, but, by an oversight of the Translator, so altered that, for an obvious reason, the Editor is obliged to give them in a Note, or not at all:

Midway between the rugged Samian † shore
And Ithaca, there lies, not large, an isle
Named Afferis ‡, with ports at either end
Accessible; among the rocks conceal'd
There lay the suitors, watching his return.

† Or Cephallenian;—B &C. for Cephallenia is sometimes called by Homer, Same or Samos from a town in it of that name.

‡ Apollodorus says that the island continued in his time such as Homer describes it, and had a small city in it, on that side next to the continent, called Alalcomene. But Strabo is so much at a loss about it, that he thinks Homer must have misrepresented the place either for want of sufficient acquaintance with it, or for the fake of his fable.—C.
ARGUMENT

OF THE

FIFTH BOOK.

Mercury bears to Calypso a command from Jupiter that she dismisses Ulysses. She, after some remonstrances, promises obedience and furnishes him with implements and materials, with which he constructs a raft. He quits Calypso's island; is persecuted by Neptune with dreadful tempests, but by the assistance of a sea nymph, after having lost his raft, is enabled to swim to Phæacia.

BOOK V.

AURORA from beside her glorious mate
Tithonus now arose, dispensing light
Through earth and heav'n, when the assembled Gods
In council sat, o'er whom high-thund'ring Jove Presided, mightiest of the Pow'rs above.
Amid them, Pallas all Ulysses' woes Enumerated, whom with grief she saw

VOL. III.  k  Detain'd
Detain'd still pris'ner in Calypso's isle *

Jove, and ye blest inhabitants of heav'n?
Be never King, hereafter, lib'ral, kind,
Or righteous, but let ev'ry sceptred hand
Rule merciless, and deal in wrong alone,
Since none of all his people whom he sway'd
With such paternal gentleness and love
Remembers, now, divine Ulysses more.
He, in yon distant isle a suff'rer lies
Of hopeless sorrow, through constraint the guest
Still of the nymph Calypso, without means
Or pow'r to reach his native shores again,
Alike of gallant barks and friends deprived,
Who might conduct him o'er the spacious Deep.
Nor this is all, but enemies combine
To slay his son ere yet he can return
From Pylus, whither he hath gone to learn
There, or in Sparta, tidings of his Sire.

To whom the Sov'reign of the skies replied.
What words are these which now have pass'd thy lips

*Tithonus, son of Laomedon, brother of Priam, husband of Aurora, is called Endymion also. As Endymion, he is mate of the Moon, and as Tithonus, of the Morning. As Endymion, he is fabled to be a hunter and to sleep in the night only, devoting the day to the labours of the chaise; but as Tithonus, he is an astronomer and sleeps in the day, watching all the night that he may observe the stars.—B. & C.
My daughter? Haft thou not, thyself, decreed
A safe return and vengeance on his foes
To brave Ulysses? Thou hast also skill
To guide uninjur'd to his native home
Telemachus his son, and canst with ease
Send back the suitors vext at his escape.

He ceas'd, and thus to Hermes spake, his son.
Hermes! (for thou art herald of our will At all times) to you beauteous nymph convey Our fixt resolve, that brave Ulysses thence Depart, unaccompanied by God or man.
Borne on a corded raft, and suff'ring woe
Extreme, he on the twentieth day shall reach,
Not sooner, Scherie the deep-foild, posses's'd
By the Phæacians, kinsmen of the Gods *.
They, as a God shall reverence the Chief
And in a bark of theirs shall send him thence
To his own home, much treasure, brass and gold
And raiment giving him, to an amount
Surpassing all that, had he safe return'd,
He should by lot have shared of Ilium's spoil.

* Scherie, the island of the Phæacians, has since been called Corcyra, but its most antient name was Drepane. They are said to be %γχιθος or to have affinity with the Gods, either on account of their King's descent from Neptune, or because they were a happy people, or because the Gods occasionally visited them and shared their banquets.—B. & C.
Thus Fate appoints Ulysses to regain
His native shore, his palace and his friends.

He ended, nor the Argicide refused,
Messenger of the skies; his sandals fair,
Ambrosial, golden, to his feet he bound,
Which o'er the moist wave, rapid as the wind,
Bear him; and o'er th' illimitable earth,
Then took his rod with which, at will, all eyes
He softly shuts, or opens them again.
So arm'd, forth flew the valiant Argicide.
Alighting on Pieria, down he stoop'd
To Ocean, and the billows lightly skimm'd
In form a sea-mew, such as in the bays
Tremendous of the barren Deep her food
Seeking, dips oft in brine her ample wing.
In such disguise o'er many a wave he rode,
But reaching, now, that isle remote, forsook
The azure Deep, and at the spacious grot,
Where dwelt the amber-tressed nymph, arrived,
Found her within. A fire on all the hearth
Blazed sprightly, and, afar-diffused, the scent
Of smooth-split cedar and of cypress-wood
Odorous, burning, cheer'd the happy isle.
She, busied at the loom, and plying fast
Her golden shuttle, with melodious voice
Sat chanting there; a grove on either side,
Alder and poplar, and the redolent branch
Of cypress hemm'd the dark retreat around.
There many a bird of broadest pinion built Secure her nest, the owl, the kite, and daw
Long-tongued, frequenter of the sandy shores.
A garden-vine luxuriant on all sides
Mantled the spacious cavern, clusster-hung
Profuse; four fountains of serenest lymph
Their sinuous course pursuing side by side,
Stray'd all around, and ev'ry where appear'd
Meadows of softest verdure, purpled o'er
With violets; it was a scene to fill
A God from heav'n with wonder and delight.
Hermes, Heav'n's messenger, admiring flood
That flood, and having all survey'd, at length
Enter'd the grotto; nor the lovely nymph
Him knew not soon as seen, for not unknown
Each to the other the Immortals are,
How far soever sep'rate their abodes.
Yet found he not within the mighty Chief
Ulysses; he sat weeping on the shore,
Forlorn; for there his custom was with groans
Of sad regret t' afflict his breaking heart,
Looking continual o'er the barren Deep.*

* The poet is supposed to sequester Ulysses on this occasion, that ignorant of the constraint under which Calypso acted, he might imagine Then thus Calypso, loveliest nymph divine,
Of Hermes, from her dazzling throne, enquired.

Hermes, swift bearer of the golden rod!
Whom I respect and love, thou art a guest
Unfrequent here—say, wherefore hast thou come?
Speak thy desire; I grant it, if thou ask Things possible, and possible to me.
Stay not, but ent’ring farther, at my board
Due rites of hospitality receive.

So saying, the Goddess with ambrosial food
Her table cover’d, and with rosy juice
Nectarous charged the cup. Then ate and drank
The Argicide and herald of the skics,
And when, divinely banquetted, he felt
His heart refresh’d, his message thus declared.

Questionest thou, a Goddess, me—a God?
I tell thee truth, since such is thy demand.
Not willing, but by Jove constrain’d, I come.
For who would, voluntary, such a breadth
Enormous measure of the salt expanse,
Where city none is seen in which the Gods
Are serv’d with chosen hecatombs and pray’r?
But no divinity may the designs imagine her consent to his departure and the means with which she furnished him to construct his raft, the effects of kindness merely, and hold himself everlastingly indebted to her.—C.

Elude,
Elude, or contravert, of Jove supreme.
He faith, that here thou hold'st the most distrest
Of all those warriors who nine years assaile'd
The city of Priam, and, (that city sack'd)
Departed in the tenth; but, going thence,
Offended Pallas, who with adverse winds
Opposed their voyage, and with boist'rous waves.
Then perish'd all his gallant friends, but him
Billows and storms drove hither; Jove commands
That thou dismiss him hence without delay,
For fate ordains him not to perish here
From all his friends remote, but he is doom'd
To see them yet again, and to arrive
At his own palace in his native land.

He said; divine Calypso at the sound
Shudder'd, and in wing'd accents thus replied.
Ye are unjust, ye Gods, and envious past
All others, grudging if a Goddess choose
A mortal husband, and avow the choice.
So, when the rosy-palm'd Aurora chose
Orion, even in your blest abodes
Ye refiled not, till, in Ortygia, pierc'd
By fair Diana's gentle shafts he died.
So when the beauteous Ceres, in a deep
Thrice-labour'd fallow, sway'd by soft desire,
Infolded young Æson in her arms,
Not long remain'd Jove ignorant, who smote
With his bright bolt and flew the favour'd swain *.
So also, O ye Gods, ye envy me
The mortal man, my comfort. Him I saved
Myself, while solitary on his keel
He rode, for with his sulph'rous arrow Jove
Had cleft his bark amid the fable Deep.
Then perish'd all his gallant friends, but him
Billows and storms drove hither, whom I lov'd
Sincere, and fondly destin'd to a life
Immortal, unobnoxious to decay.
But since no Deity may the designs
Elude or controvert of Jove supreme,
Hence with him to a death abhor'd, if such
The Sov'reign's will and such his stern command.
But undismiss'd he goes by me, who ships
Myself well-oar'd and mariners have none
To fend with him athwart the spacious flood;
Yet will I counsel him, nor shall he want

* He was the son of Jupiter and Electra the daughter of Atlas, and by his amour with Ceres became the father of Plutus.—B. & C.
This amour, however, was probably an allegorical one, as the Scholiast observes, and the truth of his history amounted to no more than that he was a person skilful in agriculture, and profiting much by his art, grew rich in consequence.—C.
Such means of furth'rance to his native isle
As my best help can furnisb for his use.

Then Hermes thus, the messenger of heav'n.
So send him hence, and quickly, through respect
For the command of Jove; whose fiery wrath,
If thou delay, thou may'st, thyself, incur.

So saying, the dauntless Argicide withdrew,
And she (Jove's mandate heard) all-graceful went,
Seeking the brave Ulysses; on the shore
She found him seated; tears that never ceas'd
His cheek bedew'd, and, since the lovely nymph
Had lost her pow'r to charm him, he resign'd
All thought of bliss besides, and in the pangs
Of hopeless exile pass'd his happiest hours.
Yet, through constraint, and listless to return
Her fond embraces, in her arch'd recess
He slept the night beside her, and, by day,
Reclining on the rocks that lined the shore,
And viewing wistfully the barren Deep,
Wept, groan'd, desponded, sigh'd, and wept again.
Then, drawing near, thus spake the nymph divine.

Unhappy! weep not here, nor life consume
In anguish; go; thou haft my glad consent.
Arise, and hewing from the trunks of trees
Long planks, with bolts of iron form a raft
Of needful breadth, which closely floor'd above,
Shall hence convey thee o' er the gloomy Deep.
Bread, water, and the red grape's cheering juice
Myself will put on board, which shall preserve Thy life from famine; I will also give
New raiment for thy limbs, and will dispatch
Winds after thee to waft thee home unharmed,
If such the pleasure of the Gods who dwell
In yonder boundless heav'n, to whom belongs
Unerring skill to judge, and not to me.

She spake; Ulysses shudder'd at the sound,
And thus th' afflicted Hero, quick, replied.

Ah! other thoughts than of my safe return
Employ thee, Goddes, now, who bid'st me pass
The perilous gulph of Ocean on a raft,
That wild expanse, which even gallant ships
Pass not, though form'd to cleave their way with ease,
And joyful in propitious winds from Jove*.

No—let me never, in despite of thee,
Embark on board a raft, nor till thou swear,
Oh Goddes! the inviolable oath,
That future mischief thou intend'st me none.

He said; Calypso, beauteous Goddes, stroak'd

* 'Ἀγαλλίουσαν. Homer, as Aristotle has observed, frequently ascribes life to inanimate things, and endues them with a meta-phorical sensibility.—C.
His wan, wet cheek, and, smiling, thus replied.

Thou dost asperse me rudely, and excuse
Of ignorance hast none, far better taught;
What words were these? How could'st thou thus reply?
Now hear me Earth, and the wide Heav'n above!
Hear, too, ye waters of the Stygian stream
Under the earth, (by which the blessed Gods Swear trembling, and revere the awful oath!)
That future mischief I intend thee none.*
No, my designs concerning thee are such
As, in an exigence resembling thine,
Myself, most sure, should for myself conceive.
I have a mind more equal, not of steel
My heart is form'd, but much to pity inclined.

So saying, the lovely Goddess with swift pace
Led on, whose footsteps he as swift pursued.
Within the vaulted cavern they arrived,
The Goddess and the man; on the same throne
Ulysses sat, whence Hermes had aris'n,
Where all refreshments, such as mortals use,
Calypso placed before him, drink and meats

* The water of Styx, according to Pausanias, dripped from a fountain near to Nonacris a town of Arcadia, and fell into the hollow of a lofty rock through which it passed into the river Cratis. He adds that it was fatal to every animal that drank it.—C.
Of various kinds, then, opposite repose,
Was served, herself, by her attendant train
With nectar and ambrosia. They their hands
Stretch'd forth together to the ready feast,
And when nor hunger more nor thirst remain'd
Unsated, thus the beauteous nymph began.

Laertes' godlike son, for wiles renown'd!
Can'st thou resolve thus suddenly to seek Thy native shores?—I wish thee, not the less,
All joy—but knew'st thou to what num'rous woes
Thy fate ordains thee, in thy voyage hence,
This calm retirement and immortal life
Enjoy'd with me, would win thee to remain, Ardent and ceaseless as thy wishes are
To see Penelope; for, whether face
Or form engage thee, well may I presume
Mine scarce inferior, since immortal charms,
Compared with mortal merely, must excel.

To whom Ulysses, ever-wise, replied.
Dread Goddess! bear with me. Myself, I know
That my Penelope, alike, in form
And stature altogether yields to thee,
For she is mortal, and immortal thou,
From age exempt; yet not the less I wish
My native home, and languish till the day

That
That sees my safe arrival, shall arise.
But should some God amid the sable Deep
Dash me again into a wreck, my soul
Shall never, ev'n for such a cause, renounce
Her wonted fortitude; for I have borne
In storms and battle much; now, therefore, come
This evil also, following all the rest *

He ended, and the sinking sun resign'd
The earth to darkness. Then in a recess
Interiour of the cavern, side by side
Reposed, they took their amorous delight.
But when Aurora, daughter of the dawn,
Look'd rosy forth, Ulysses then in haste
Put on his vest and mantle, and, the nymph
Her snowy vesture of transparent woof,
Graceful, redundant; to her waist the bound
Her golden zone, and veil'd her beauteous head;

* Maximus Tyrius considers the refusal of Ulysses to become immortal, exempt from all infirmity, and to dwell for ever with Calypso attended by beautiful Nymphs and enjoying perpetual pleasure, as an argument that he was of a dull and gross nature, and so destitute of all virtue, that but for his misfortunes and sufferings he would soon be utterly forgotten.—C. But surely he inverts the conclusion which the premises naturally suggest; and the hero may much more justly be said, when he prefers the barren Ithaca, because it is his proper home, to the delightful island of Calypso, to exhibit proof of the most consummate virtue. There seems no reason to doubt that Homer designed it as his highest eulogium.

Then,
Then, musing, plann'd the noble Chief's return.
She gave him, fitted to the grasp, an axe
Of iron, pond'rous, double edg'd, with haft
Of olive-wood, inserted firm, and wrought
With curious art. Then, placing in his hand
A polish'd adze, she led, herself, the way
To her isle's utmost verge, where loftiest stood
The alder, poplar, and cloud-piercing fir,
Though sapless, sound, and fittest for his use
As buoyant mast. To that once verdant grove
His steps, the beauteous Nymph Calypso led,
And sought her home again. Then slept not He,
But, swinging with both hands the axe, his task
Soon finish'd; trees full twenty to the ground
He cast, which, dext'rous, with his adze he smooth'd,
The knotted surface chipping by a line.
Mean-time the lovely Goddess to his aid
Sharp augres brought, with which he bored the beams,
Then placed them side by side, adapting each
To other, and the seams with wadding closed.*
Broad as an artif, skill'd in naval works,
The bottom of a ship of burthen spreads,

* This, according to Eustathius, is the probable meaning of ἀρμοϊςιν ἀμην. He supposes the ἀμην to be a sort of tow made from vegetables, and applied by the antients to naval uses, as hemp among us.—C.
Such breadth Ulysses to his raft assign'd.
He deck'd her over with long planks, upborn
On masty beams; He made the mast, to which He added suitable the yard;—he framed
Rudder and helm to regulate her course,
With wicker-work he border'd all her length
For safety, and much ballast flow'd within.
Mean-time, Calypso brought him for a sail
Fittest materials, which he also shaped,
And to his sail due furniture annex'd
Of cordage strong, foot-ropes and ropes aloft,
Then heav'd her down with levers to the Deep.
He finish'd all his work on the fourth day,
And on the fifth, Calypso, nymph divine,
Dismiss'd him from her isle, but laved him first,
And cloth'd him in sweet-scented garments new.
Two skins the Goddes also placed on board,
One charg'd with crimson wine, and ampler one
With water; nor a bag with food replete
Forgot, nutritious, grateful to the taste,
Nor yet, her latest gift, a gentle gale
And manageable, which Ulysses spread,
Exulting, all his canvas to receive.
Beside the helm he sat, steering expert,
Nor sleep fell ever on his eyes that watch'd
Intent the Pleiads, tardy in decline
Bootes,
Bootes, and the Bear, call'd else the Wain,
Which, in his polar prison circling, looks
Direct toward Orion, and alone
Of these finks never to the briny Deep*.
That star the lovely Gods bade him hold
Continual on his left through all his course.
Ten days and sev'n, he, navigating, cleav'd
The brine, and on the eighteenth day, at length
The shadowy mountains of Phæacia's land
Descried, where nearest to his course it lay
Like a broad buckler on the waves afloat.

But Neptune, traversing, in his return
From Æthiopia's sons, the mountain-heights
Of Solyme, descried him from afar
Born on the smooth expanse†. His fiery wrath
Redoubling at the sight, his brows he shook,
And thus within himself, indignant, spake.

So then—while I with Æthiopia's sons
Have dwelt secure, Ulysses, as it seems,
Hath found the Gods less adverse. He beholds Phæacia nigh, where he is doom'd to leap

* That Homer had an accurate knowledge of astronomy, says Dionysius Hal. is evident, and if he has not given us in his poems the whole theory of the heavens, as Aratus, or any other professed astronomer may have done, it is only because his subject did not call him to it.—C.
† The Solymi were a people on the confines of Lycia. Their country was also called Pisdia.—C.
The bound'ry of his woes; yet such distress
As I can cause, he shall not want the while.

He spake, and grasping his huge trident, call'd
Storms from all quarters, cov'ring earth and sea
With blackest clouds, and night rush'd down from heav'n.
The East, the South, the heavy-blowing West,
And the cold North-wind clear, aflail'd at once
The raft, and heav'd on high the billowy flood.
All hope, all courage, in that moment, lost,
The Hero thus within himself complain'd.

Wretch that I am, what destiny at last Attends me! much I fear the Goddes' words
All true, which threaten'd me with num'rous ills
On the wide sea, ere I should reach my home.
Behold them all fulfill'd! with what a storm
Jove hangs the heav'ns, and agitates the Deep!
Swift comes the tempest on; the gather'd winds
All rage at once, and there is no escape.
Thrice blest, and more than thrice, Achaia's sons
At Ilion slain for the Atridae's sake!
Oh that contending with the Trojan host
For slain Achilles, when a thousand spears Aflail'd me, I had died! Achaia's sons
Had then, with founding shields, and solemn march,
And strains funereal compass'd me around,
Whom ruthless Fate now dooms to perish here.
A billow, at that word, with dreadful sweep
Roll'd o'er his head, and whirl'd the raft around.
Dash'd from the steerage o'er the vessel's side,
He plunged remote; the gust of mingling winds
Snapp'd short the mast, and sail and sail-yard bore Afar into the Deep. Long time beneath
The whelming waves he lay, nor could emerge
With sudden force, for furious was the shock,
And his apparel, fair Calypte's gift,
Oppress'd him sorely; but, at length, he rose,
And, rising, spatter'd from his lips the brine
Which trickling left his brows in many a stream.
Nor, though distress'd, unmindful to regain
His raft was he, but, buffeting the waves
Pursued, and, wellnigh at his dying gasp
Recover'd it, and in the centre sat.
She, by the billows toss'd, at random roll'd.
As when, in autumn, Boreas o'er the plain
Before him drives a mass of matted thorns,
They, tangled, to each other close adhere,
So her the winds drove wild about the Deep.
By turns, the South consign'd her, as in sport,
To the rude North-wind, and the West, by turns,
Received her from the intermitting East.
Him Cadmus' daughter, Ino named of old,
But now Leucothea, saw. She, lovely Nymph,

Once
Once mortal, trod the ground*, but in the gulphs
Of Ocean shares immortal honours now.
Her pity, tempest-toss’d and worn with toil
Ulysses moved, and in a sea-mew’s form
Emerging, with broad wing she skimm’d the waves,
And perching on the raft, him thus address’d.

Alas! unhappy! how hast thou incensed
So terribly the Shaker of the shores,
That he pursues thee with such num’rous ills?
Sink thee he cannot, wish it as he may.
Thus do (for I account thee not unwise)
Thy garments putting off, let drive thy raft
As the winds will; then, swimming, strive to reach Phæacia, where thy doom is to escape.
Take this. This riband bind beneath thy breast, Celestial texture. Thenceforth every fear
Of death dismis’d, and, laying once thy hands
On the firm continent, unbind the zone,
Which thou shalt cast far distant from the shore
Into the Deep; but turn thy face away.

So saying, the Goddess gave into his hand
The wond’rous zone, and, sea-mew still in form,
Plunged from his sight beneath the rolling flood.
But still th’ afflicted hero fat perplex’d,

* The Translator finding himself free to choose between ᾿αὐδήσσα and ἰδίσσα, has preferred the latter.
And with his noble heart thus communed sad.

Alas! This counsel to forsake the raft—
I fear it—left some Deity design
Another snare for me; nor shall I yield
Obedience soon; for I beheld the land
Of my foretold deliverance far remote.
Thus, therefore, will I do, for such appears My wiser course. While yet the planks sustain
This tempest undisjoin'd, I will abide
A sufferer on the raft; but when the waves
Shall once have shattered it, I will effay
This girdle then—my sole expedient left.
While thus he mused, the God of ocean heav'd
A mountainous and overwhelming wave
And hurl'd it at the raft. As when the wind
Tempestuous, falling on some stubble-heap,
The arid straws disperses ev'ry way,
So flew the timbers. He, a single beam
Befreiding, oar'd it onward with his feet,
As he had urged an horse. Then putting off Calypso's gift, his drench'd attire, he bound
His girdle on, and prone into the sea
With wide-spread palms prepar'd for swimming, fell.
The God of ocean eyed him; in disdain
He shook his brows, and in his heart he said,

Thus, suffer'ring many mis'ries roam the flood,
Till thou shalt mingle with a race of men Heav'n's special favourites; yet even there Fear not that thou shalt feel thy sorrows light.

He said, and scourging his bright sides, arrived At Ægæ, where his glorious palace stands.

But other thoughts Minerva's mind employ'd Jove's daughter; binding ev'ry wind beside, She lull'd them, and enjoin'd them all to sleep, But roufed swift Boreas, and the billows bade Subside before him, till the noble Chief, From death deliver'd and the grasp of fate, Should mingle with Phæacia's sons, secure.

Two nights of terror and two dreadful days Bewilder'd in the Deep, and many a time Forboding death, he roam'd; but when, at length, The third bright morn appear'd, the wind, assuaged, Blew softly, and a breathless calm ensued. Then, casting from a billow's height a look Of anxious heed, he saw Phæacia nigh.

Precious as to his children seems the life Of some fond father, who hath long endured His adverse demon's rage, by slow disease And ceaseless anguish wasted, till the Gods Dispel at length their fears, and he revives,

* An island in front of Eubœa, sacred to Neptune.—B. & C.
So grateful to Ulysses' flight appear'd
Forests and hills. Impatient with his feet
To press the shore, he swam; but when within Such distance as a shout may reach, he came,
The thunder of the sea against the rocks
Then smote his ear; for hoarse the billows roar'd
On the firm land, belch'd horrible abroad,
And the salt-spray dimm'd all things to his view.
For neither port for ships nor shel't'ring cove
Was there, but the rude coast a headland bluff
Presented, rocks and craggy maffes huge.
All hope and strength then failing him, he heav'd
A deep long groan, and in his heart he said—
Alas! though Jove hath given me to behold, Unhoped, the land again, and I have pass'd, Furrowing my way, these num'rous waves, there seems
No egress from the hoary flood for me.
Sharp stones hem in the waters; wild the surge
Raves ev'rywhere; and smooth the rocks arise;
Deep also is the shore, on which my feet
No standing gain, or chance of safe escape.
What if some billow catch me from the Deep Emerging, and against the pointed rocks
Dash me conflicting with its force in vain?
But should I, swimming, trace the coast in search
Of sloping beach, haven or shelter'd creek,
I fear
I fear left, groaning, I be snatch’d again
By stormy gusts into the fishy Deep,
Or left some monster of the flood receive Command to seize me, of the many such
By the illustrious Amphitrite bred;
For that the mighty Shaker of the shores
Hates me implacable, too well I know.

While such discourse within himself he held,
A huge wave heav’d him on the rugged coast,
Where lay’d his flesh had been, and all his bones
Broken together, but for the infused
Good counsel of Minerva azure-eyed.
With both hands suddenly he seized the rock,
And, groaning, clench’d it till the billow pass’d.
So baffled he that wave; but yet again
The refluent flood rush’d on him, and with force
Resistless dash’d him far into the sea.
As when the Polypus, enforced, forfakes
His rough recess, in his contracted claws
He gripes the pebbles, still, to which he clung,
So he, within his lacerated grasp
The crumbled stone retain’d, when from his hold
The huge wave forced him, and he sank again.
Then had not Fate herself prevail’d to save Hapless Ulysses, but that he pursu’d, Admonish’d by the Goddes moit his friend,
A course more prudent*. From the foamy flood Emerging, where the billows dash'd the shore,
He swam behind them, with a landward look
For some safe shelter open'd by the waves.
But when, still swimming, to the mouth he came
Of a smooth-sliding river, there he deem'd
Safest th' ascent, for it was undeform'd
By rocks, and shelter'd close from ev'ry wind.
He felt the current, and thus, ardent, pray'd.

Oh King! whate'er thy name, whose welcome course, Escaping Neptune's menaces, I reach,
Propitious hear my pray'r! the Gods themselves
Respect the fugitive forlorn as I,
Who now, long-time a suff'r, first behold
Thy gentle stream, and seek thy gracious aid.
Oh hear thy suppliant! Pity my distress!

He said; the river-God at once repress'd

* Plutarch vindicating Homer against some who charged him with making mere machines of his heroes, who, as they alleged, perform arduous and incredible things not by efforts and exertions of their own, but by a divine irresistible impulse, observes that on new and extraordinary emergencies, such as demand uncommon animation and exertion, the poet does not introduce his Deities to supersede, but merely to direct the will, not to force into action, but to suggest such ideas as may determine the agent, and by the effect of which he moves, not necessarily, but rationally and from a principle of free choice, with the additional advantage of fresh hope and courage.—C.
His current, and it ceas'd; then smooth he made
The way before Ulysses, and the land
Vouchsafed him easy at his channel's mouth.
There, once again he bent for case his limbs
Both arms and knees, in conflict with the floods
Exhausted; swoln his body was all o'er,
And from his mouth and nostrils stream'd the brine.
Breathless and speechless, and of life wellnigh
Berest he lay, through dreadful toil immense.
But when, revived, his dissipate pow'rs
He recollected, loosin from beneath
His breast the zone divine, he cast it far
Into the brackish stream, and a huge wave
Returning bore it downward to the sea,
Where Ino caught it. Then, the river's brink Abandoning, among the rushes prone
He lay, kiss'd oft the soil, and sighing, said,

* In the judgment of Euflathius Ulysses bends his limbs for a philosophical reason, and left the muscles having been kept on the stretch many days, his limbs should become stiff and useless. But Dacier thinking the hero at present in no condition to philosophize, supposes rather that he let fall his limbs through weariness. Clarke however observes justly that to let fall is by no means the sense of expiavit, and understands therefore that he bent his legs and his arms, not philosophically, but simply to relieve them.

† The poet takes no notice of his obedience to the command of Ino to turn his face another way when he should cast the zone into the water, but leaves us to take it for granted that the ceremony was not neglected.

Ah
Ah me! what suff'renings must I now sustain,
What doom, at last, awaits me? Should I watch
The long sad night beside the river's brink,
I fear left spiritless and overtoil'd
I perish by the frost and chilling dews,
For cold o'er water comes the morning air.
But should I reach yon dusky woods that crown
These sloping hills, and make my couch beneath
Their thickest boughs, if even there, at ease,
Reposing and from cold secure, I yield
To sleep's soft influence, may I not be torn
By some voracious prowler of the wild?

Long time he mused, but, at the last, his course
Bent to the woods, which near the river-side
He saw, encompass'd by an open lawn.
Arrived, between two neighbour shrubs he crept,
Both olives, this the fruitful, that the wild;
A covert, which nor rough winds blowing moist
Could penetrate, nor could the noon-day sun
Smite through it, or unceasing show'rs pervade,
So thick a roof the ample branches form'd
Close interwoven; under these the Chief
Retiring, with industrious hands amass'd
An ample couch, for fallen leaves he found.
Abundant there, such store as had sufficed
Two travellers or three for covering warm,

Though
Though winter's roughest blasts had rag'd the while.
That bed with joy the suffer'd Chief renown'd Contemplated, and occupying soon
The middle space, heap'd higher still the leaves.
As when some swain hath hidden deep his torch
Beneath the embers, at the verge extreme
Of all his farm, where, having neighbours none,
He sav'd a seed or two of future flame
Alive, doom'd else to fetch it from afar,
So with dry leaves Ulysses overspread
His body, on whose eyes Minerva pour'd
The balm of sleep, and eager to restore
His wasted strength, soon closed their weary lids *.

* Homer says σπόρος, and Virgil after him—semina flammeae.—C.
ARGUMENT
OF THE
SIXTH BOOK.

Minerva designing an interview between the daughter of Alcinoüs and Ulysses, admonishes her in a dream to carry down her clothes to the river, that she may wash them, and make them ready for her approaching nuptials. That task performed, the Princess and her train amuse themselves with play; by accident they awake Ulysses; he comes forth from the wood, and applies himself with much address to Nausicaa, who compassionating his distressed condition, and being much affected by the dignity of his appearance, interests herself in his favour, and conducts him to the city.

BOOK VI.

While thus by sleep and weariness subdued,
The brave Ulysses lay, Minerva sought
The city of Phæacia*. In old time
Phæacia's sons possess'd the fruitful plains

* It is a remark of Estathius that the poet, having laid Ulysses asleep, interweaves with his subject this short history of the first Phæacians, merely to enliven his matter, and to relieve it from an appearance of sameness.—C.
Of Hypereia, bord'ring on the fierce Cyclopean race, from whose superiour might They suffer'd num'rous wrongs. At length arose Godlike Nausithoüs; he, their leader thence,
In Scheria placed them, an unneighbour'd isle,
And far from all ressort of busy man.
He circled round their city with a wall,
Their houses, and the temples of the Gods
He built, and made division of the soil.
But, victim of his fate, in Hades dwelt Nausithoüs now, and, in his stead, endued
With wisdom by the Gods, Alcinoüs reign'd.
To his abode Minerva azure-eyed
Repair'd, neglecting nought which might advance
Magnanimous Ulysses' safe return.
She sought the sumptuous chamber where, in form
And feature perfect as the Gods, the young Nausicaa, daughter of the King, repos'd.
Fast by the pillars of the portal lay
Two damsels, one on either side, adorn'd
By all the Graces, and the doors were shut.
Soft as a breathing air, she stole toward
The virgin's couch, and, standing at her head
In form of her companion dearly loved
The daughter of a mariner renown'd
For skill and courage, Dymas, thus began.

1 Nausicaa!
Nausicaa! wherefore hath thy mother borne
A child so negligent? Thy garments share,
Thy most magnificent, no thought of thine.
Yet thou must marry soon, and must provide Robes for thyself, and for thy nuptial train.
Thy fame, on these concerns, and honour stand;
These managed well, thy parents shall rejoice.
The dawn appearing, let us to the place
Of washing, where thy work-mate I will be
For speedier riddance of thy task, since soon
The days of thy virginity shall end;
For thou art woo'd already by the prime
Of all Phæacia, country of thy birth.
Come then—solicit at the dawn of day
Thy royal father, that he send thee forth
With mules and carriage for conveyance hence
Of thy best robes, thy mantles and thy zones.
Thus, more commodiously thou shalt perform
The journey, for the cisterns lie remote.

So saying, the Goddess ceas'd, and fought at once
Olympus, by repute th' eternal feat
Of the ethereal Pow'rs, which never storms
Disturb, rains drench, or snow invades, but calm

* It is said to have been the custom for the bride to furnish the friends of the bridegroom with the apparel in which it was proper that they should attend the nuptials.—C.
The expanse and cloudless shines with purest day.
There the inhabitants divine rejoice
For ever, and, the damsel thus advised,
Thither the blue-eyed Deity repair'd.*

Now came bright-charioted Aurora forth
And waken'd fair Nausicaa; she her dream
Remember'd wond'ring, and her parents sought Anxious to tell them. Them she found within.
Beside the hearth her royal mother sat,
Spinning soft fleeces with sea-purple dyed
Among her menial maidens; but she met
Her father, whom the Nobles of the land
Had summon'd, issuing abroad to join
The Illustrious Chiefs in council. At his side
She stood, and thus her filial suit preferr'd.

Sir†! wilt thou lend me of the royal wains
A sumpter-carriage? for our costly robes
All fullied now, the cleansing stream require;
And thine, especially, when thou appear'st
In council with the princes of the land,

* Aristotle, giving the etymology of Olympus, derives it from ὀλυμπεῖον—all-splendid. For it is a region, he says, exempt from obscurity, and secure from those irregular commotions which storms and various other causes produce below.—C.

† In the Original, she calls him, pappa! a more natural style of address, and more endearing. But antient as this appellative is, it is also so familiar in modern use, that the Translator feared to hazard it.
Had need be pure. Thy sons are also five,
Two wedded, and the rest of age to wed,
Who go not to the dance unless adorn'd
With fresh attire—all which is my concern.

So spake Nausicaa; for she dared not name
Her own glad nuptials to her father's ear,
Who, conscious yet of all her drift, replied.

I grudge thee neither mules, my child, nor aught
That thou canst ask beside. Go, and my train
Shall furnish thee a sumptuer-carriage forth
High-built, strong-wheel'd, and of capacious size.

So saying, he issued his command, whom quick
His grooms obey'd. They in the court prepared
The sumptuer-carriage, and adjoin'd the mules.
And now the virgin from her chamber, charged
With raiment, came, which on the car she placed,
And in the carriage-chest, mean-time, the Queen,
Her mother, viands of all flavours heap'd,
And fill'd a goatskin with delicious wine.
This done, the damsel mounted, but receiv'd
For unction of herself and of her maids
From the Queen's hand a golden cruife of oil
Ere yet she went. Then, seizing on the scourge
And on the splendid reins, she lashed the mules.
They, straining, stamp'd the soil, hard task'd to draw
Princess and raiment both; nor sole she went,

But
But others also, maidens of her train.
At the delightful rivulet arrived
Where those perennial cisterns were prepared
With purest crystal of the fountain fed
Profuse, sufficient for the deepest stains,
Loosing the mules, they drove them forth to browse
On the sweet herb beside the dimpled flood.
Light'ning the carriage, next, they bore in hand
The garments down to the unfullied wave,
And thrust them heap'd into the pools, their task
Dispatching brisk, and with an emulous haste.
When all were purified, and neither spot
Could be perceived or blemish more, they spread
The raiment orderly along the beach
Where dashing tides had cleansed the pebbles most,
And laving, next, and smoothing o'er with oil
Their limbs, all seated on the river's bank,
They took repast, while stretch'd the garments lay
In noon-day fervour of the sun, to dry.
Their hunger satisfied, at once arose
The mistress and her train, and putting off

* Paufanias says there was an antient picture to be seen in his time, representing two virgins drawn by mules, one holding the reins, the other attired in a veil. They were supposed to be Nau-ficaa and her maid driving to the cisterns or canals where they washed their linen.—C.
Their head-attire, play'd wanton with the ball,
The princess singing to her maids the while.
As shaft-arm'd Dian o'er the mountains moves,
Taygetus or Erymanth sublime,
The wild boar chafing or the tim'rous deer,
The rural nymphs, Jove's daughters, the delight
Share also, and Latona's bosom swells
With secret joy; for though the Nymphs be fair,
In Dian's fairer form and statelier mien
The Goddess shines, apparent from afar,
So, all her train, she, virgin pure, excell'd.*

But when the hour of her departure thence Approach'd (the mules now yoked again, and all Her elegant apparel folded neat)
Then Pallas means devis'd from sleep to rouse
Ulysses, and to show him, ere she went,
His future fair conductress to the town.
The Princess cast the ball, but missing Her
At whom she cast it, plunged it in the flood.

* The reader, if he will consult Clarke, will find in his anno-tations a curious extract from Gellius, in which he gives us the estimate made by Valerius Probus of the comparative merits of this simile as it stands in Homer with Virgil's imitation of it. The preference is given to Homer's, and for the best reasons.—The extract is too long to have place here.

Taygetus was a mountain of Laconia, at small distance from the sea, lofty and upright, and adjoined on its northern side to the bottom of the Arcadian mountains.
Loud shriek’d the damsels. Startled at the sound
Ulysses fat erect, and thus he mused.

Ah me! what mortal race inhabit here?
Rude are they, contumacious and unjust?
Or hospitable, and who fear the Gods?
How piercing was that cry! the voice it seem’d
Of nymphs who wanton on aerial-heights,
Beside clear fountains, or in grassy vales.
Is this a neighbourhood of men endued
With voice articulate? But what avails Self-questioning? I will go forth and see.

So saying, divine Ulysses from beneath
His thicket crept, and from the leafy wood
A spreading branch pluck’d forcibly, design’d
A decent screen effectual, held before.
Like an huge mountain-lion forth he went,
Whom winds have vex’d and rains; fire fills his eyes,
And whether herds or flocks, or woodland deer
He find, he rends them, and, adjut for blood,
Abstains not even from the guarded fold,
Such sure to seem in virgin eyes, the Chief,
All naked as he was, his covert left,
Reluctant, by necessity constrain’d.
To them, with weeds and briny foam defiled
All terrible he seem’d, and to the land’s
Remoteft points dispers'd at once they flew*. Nausicaa alone fled not; for her Pallas courageous made, and from her limbs, By pow'r divine, all tremour took away. Firm she expected him; he doubtful flood Or to implore the lovely maid, her knees Embracing, or, at distance due, to ask In suppliant terms apparel, and the boon Of guidance to the city where she dwelt. Him so deliberating, most, at length, This counsel pleas'd; in suppliant terms aloof To sue to her, left if he clasp'd her knees, The virgin should that bolder course resent. Then gentle, thus, and well-advised he spake. Oh Queen! thy earnest suppliant I approach. Art thou some Goddess, or of mortal race? For if some Goddess, and from heaven arrived,

* Some have deemed Ulysses so lately exhausted with fatigue no proper subject of comparison with a lion. But Euflathius judges that the force of the comparison consists in the appearance he could not fail to make in the eyes of the timorous maidens, the attendants on Nausicaa. His strength, his bulk, the intrepidity with which he comes forth, are, in his opinion, by no means the circumstances which the poet means to illustrate by the Simile, but their astonishment only, which was such that at the first glimpse of him they fled, as a flock of sheep, or as deer before a lion.—C.

Polygnotus, we are told, made choice of this scene for the subject of one of his paintings.—C.

Then,
Then, Dian, daughter of all-pow'rful Jove
I deem thee most, for such as hers appear
Thy form, thy stature, and thy air divine.
But, if, of mortal race, thou dwell below,
Thrice happy then, thy parents I account,
And happy thrice thy brethren. Ah! the joy
Which always, for thy face, their bosoms fills,
When thee they view, all lovely as thou art,
Ent'ring majestic on the graceful dance.
But him beyond all others blest I deem,
The youth, who, wealthier than his rich compeers,
Shall win and lead thee to his honour'd home *.
For never with these eyes a mortal form
Beheld I comparable aught to thine,
In man or woman. Wonder-rapt I gaze.
Such erst, in Delos, I beheld a palm
Beside the altar of Apollo, tall,
And growing still †; (for thither too I fail'd,

* Thus Eustathius interprets the expression—"O; εἰς ο ἡ σειράς βήσας
—The youth, says he, who shall surpass his competitors in the multitudine of his nuptial presents, and shall therefore win thee. The word βήσας, he adds, is a metaphor taken from things that preponderate in the scale.—C.

† Cicero says that the palm here mentioned by Ulysses was shown as a curiosity in his time. It was fabled to have riven suddenly out of the ground for the use of Latona, that she might support herself either by grasping or leaning against it when she brought forth Apollo.—B. & C.
And num'rous were my followers in a voyage Ordain'd my ruin) and as then I view'd
That palm long time amazed, for never grew
So strait a shaft, so lovely from the ground,
So, Princess! thee with wonder I behold,
Charm'd into fixt astonishment, by awe
Alone forbidden to embrace thy knees,
For I am one on whom much woe hath fall'n.
Ye'terday I escaped (the twentieth day
Of my distress by sea) the dreary Deep;
For, all those days, the waves and rapid storms
Bore me along, impetuous, from the isle
Ogygia; till at length the will of heav'n
Cast me, that I might also here sustain Affliction, on your shore; for rest, I think,
Is not for me. No. The immortal Gods
Have much to accomplish ere that day arrive.
But, oh Queen, pity me! who after long Calamities endured, of all who live Thee first approach, nor mortal know beside
Of the inhabitants of all the land.
Shew me your city; give me, although coarse,
Some cov'ring (if coarse cov'ring thou canst give)
And may the Gods thy largest wishes grant,
House, husband, concord! for of all the gifts
Of heav'n, more precious none I deem, than peace
'Twixt
"Twixt wedded pair, and union undisso\-\-\-\-\-\-volved;
Envy torments their enemies, but joy
Fills ev'ry virtuous breast, and most their own *.

To whom Nausicaa the fair replied.
Stranger! thou seem'st not worthless or unwise.
But Jove whose sov'reign hand to bad men oft Appoints the happier lot, to thee assigns
Affliction, which thy part it is t' endure;
And since the waves have cast thee on our isle
Nor garment thou shalt want, nor aught beside Due to a suppliant guest like thee forlorn.
I will both shew thee where our city stands,
And who dwell here. Phæacia's sons possess
This land; but I am daughter of their King
The brave Alcinoüs, on whose sway depends
For strength and wealth the whole Phæacian race.

She said, and to her beauteous maidens gave Instant commandment—My attendants, stay!
Why flee ye thus, and whither, from the sight

• Phocylides, as quoted by Clarke, has beautifully expressed the same sentiment.

---T' γὰρ ὑδότερον καὶ ἀμετόν,
"Η ὅταν ἀιδρὶ γυνὴ φρονῆ φίλα γῆρας ἄχρι,
Καὶ πόσιν ἄλλην, καὶ ἱμάτιον ἀνίχνεα νίκος;
What lovelier spectacle, than wedded pair
Reciprocally kind from youth to age,
Ard keeping perfect concord to the last?
Of a mere mortal? Seems he in your eyes
Some enemy of ours? The heart beats not,
Nor shall it beat hereafter, which shall come
An enemy to the Phaeacian shores,
So dear to the immortal Gods are we.
Remote, amid the billowy Deep, we hold
Our dwelling, utmost of all human-kind,
And free from mixture with a foreign race.
This man, a miserable wand’rer comes,
Whom we are bound to cherish, for the poor
And stranger are from Jove, and trivial gifts
To such are welcome. Bring ye therefore food
And wine, my maidens, for the guest’s regale,
And lave him where the stream is shelter’d most.
She spake; they stood, and by each other’s words
Encouraged, placed Ulysses where the bank
O’erhung the stream, as fair Nausicaa bade,
Daughter of King Alcinoüs the renown’d.
Apparel also at his side they spread,
Mantle and vest, and, next, the limpid oil
Presenting to him in the golden cruile, Exhorted him to bathe. The noble Chief
Ulysses then the maidens thus bespake.
Ye maidens, stand apart, that I may cleanse,
Myself, my shoulders from the briny surf,
And give them oil which they have wanted long.

But
But in your presence I bathe not, ashamed
T'appear uncover'd in a woman's fight.

He said; they went, and to Nauficaa told
His answer; then the Hero in the stream
His shoulders laved and loins incrusted rough
With the salt spray, and with his hands the scum
Of the wild ocean from his locks express'd *. Thus wash'd all over, and refresh'd with oil,
He put the garments on, Nauficaa's gift.
Then Pallas, progeny of Jove, his form
Dilated more, and from his head diffused
His curling locks like hyacinthine flowers.
As when some artist, by Minerva made
And Vulcan wife to execute all tasks
Ingenious, binding with a golden verge
Bright silver, finishes a graceful work,
Such grace the Goddes o'er his ample chest
Copious diffused, and o'er his manly brows.
Retiring, on the beach he sat, with grace
And dignity illum'd, where, viewing him,
The virgin Princess with amazement mark'd
His beauty, and her damsels thus bespake.

* When a person newly emerged from the sea stands in the sun, the water is soon dried from his body by the heat, but the saline particles condensed will continue to adhere to his skin, till they are washed away with a lotion of some other kind.—Plutarch Sympoliac. L. 1. Problem 9.—C.
My lovely maidens, listen to my voice!
Not hated, sure, by all above, this man
Among Phæacia's godlike sons arrives.
At first I deem'd him of plebeian sort Dishonourable, but he now assumes
A near resemblance to the Gods above.
Oh that myself were his, and that he dwelt
And would consent to dwell for ever here!
Give him, my maidens, food, and give him wine*.

She spake, at whose command, her maidens placed
With prompt alacrity both wine and food
Before Ulyfles; he rapacious ate
And drank with eager lips, for he had lived
From taste of aliment long time estranged.

On other thoughts mean-time intent, her charge
Of folded vestments neat the Princess placed Within the royal wain, then yoked the mules,
And to her seat herself ascending, call'd
Ulyfles to depart, and thus she spake.

Up, stranger! seek the city. I will lead

* If Nausicaa, now marriageable and expecting soon to be married, prates thus to her maidens merely because she has, like Calypso, conceived a passion for the stranger, her boldness and want of delicacy are much to be cenfured. But if, inferring his rank from his expression, and his good sense from his manner of addressing her, she prefers an union with such a man, rather than with any of the rich or the dancers of her own city, she is entitled then to our admiration.—Plutarch. de audiendis Poëti.—C.
Thy steps toward my royal Father's house,
Where all Phæacia's Nobles thou shalt see.
But thou (for I account thee not unwise)
This course pursue. While through the fields we pass,
And labours of the rural hind, so long
With my attendants follow fast the mules
And sumpter-carriage. I will be thy guide.
But, once the summit gain'd, on which is built
Our city with proud bulwarks fenced around,
And laved on both sides by its pleasant port
Of narrow entrance, where our gallant barks
Line all the road, each station'd in her place,
And where, adjoining to the splendid sene
Of Neptune, stands the forum with huge stones
From quarries thither drawn, constructed strong,
In which the rigging of their barks they keep Sail-cloth and cordage, and make smooth their oars;
(For bow and quiver the Phæacian race
Heed not, but masts and oars, and ships well-poised,
With which exulting they divide the flood)
Then, cautious, I would shun their bitter taunts
Disgustful, lest they mock me as I pass;
For of the meaner people some are coarse
In the extreme, and it may chance that one,
The basest there, shall, seeing us, exclaim—
What handsome stranger of athletic form

Attends
Attends the Princess? Where had she the chance
To find him? We shall see them wedded soon.
Either she hath received some vagrant guest
From distant lands, (for no land neighbours ours)
Or some Divinity for whom she pined,
And whose embrace with ceaseless pray'r she sought Hath left the heav'ns to be for ever hers.
'Tis well if, searching, she have found at last
An husband for herself, since she accounts
All her Phæacian wooers nothing worth
However noble. Thus shall I be scorn'd*.
And I should blame, myself, a virgin much,
Who, heedless how she might displease and grieve
Her parents, were familiar with a man
Ere celebration of her spousal rites†.

* It is well observed by Eustathius, that this contrivance of Nausicaa to reveal to Ulysses the love she felt for him by a supposed remark of another, is truly admirable. Had she made the discovery to him speaking in her own person, as he adds, her behaviour would have been insufferable.—C. Neither ought it to be forgotten that her morning-dream which spoke her nuptials near, connected with the arrival of Ulysses, would naturally seem to her to point out him as the man to whom she was deeded.

† Πάρθενικι δι φύλατθ τελυκλής τοιαύτης,
Μηδε μιν αξίως γάμοι προ δέμων ορθών ίδιος.
Phocylides, πνημα τελυτικον, ver. 203.—C.

See that your virgin's chamber door shut fast,
Nor let her, till she wed, be seen abroad.

But
But mark me, stranger! following my advice, Thou shalt the sooner at my father's hands
Obtain safe conduct and conveyance home.
Sacred to Pallas a delightful grove
Of poplars skirts the road, which we shall reach
Erelong; within that grove a fountain flows,
And meads encircle it; my father's farm
Is there, and his luxuriant garden-plot;
A shout might reach it from the city-walls.
There wait, till in the town arrived, we gain
My father's palace; and when reason bids
Suppose us there, then ent'ring thou the town,
Ask where Alcinoüs dwells, my valiant Sire.
His house is easily discern'd; a child
May lead thee to it; for Phæacia's sons
Possess not houses equalling in aught
The mansion of Alcinoüs the King.
Within the court arrived, with hasty steps
Advancing, pause not till thou reach the Queen
My mother; she before the blazing hearth
And at a column's base, fits twisting wool
Tinged with sea-purple, and behind her sit,
Their task a wond'rous web, her busy maids.
There also stands my father's throne, on which Seated, he drinks and banquets like a God.
Pass that; then suppliant clasp my mother's knees,
So shalt thou quickly see the joyful day
Of thy return, though distant far from home.
Yes—if she favour thee, thou may'st indulge
The hope thenceforth to see again thy friends,
Thy mansion, and to tread thy native shores.

So saying, she with her splendid scourge the mules Lash'd onward. They (the stream soon left behind)
With even footsteps graceful smote the ground;
But so she ruled them, managing with art
The scourge, as not to leave afar, although Following on foot, Ulysses and her train.
The sun had reach'd the West, when in that grove
To Pallas consecrated they arrived,
In which Ulysses sat, and fervent thus Sued to the daughter of Jove aegis-arm'd.

Daughter invincible of Jove supreme!
Oh, hear me! Hear me now, because when erst
The mighty Shaker of the shores incensed
Toss'd me from wave to wave, thou heard'st me not.
Grant me, among Phæacia's sons, to find Benevolence and pity of my woes!

He spake, whose pray'r well-pleas'd the Goddes heard,
Yet would not, ere he reach'd his native home,
Afford him open aid, through fear t'offend
The Brother of her Sire *, who still pursued Godlike Ulysses with a boundless hate †.

* Neptune.
† This is the sense in which Barnes understands the concluding lines of the book, and it seems the best sense. Others connect πάρειν γαῖναι ἵππασιν with ἐπιζηκὼς μενέκινοι, but they connect themselves much more properly with ἐπὶ παῦντ ἐναυσίν, for Neptune occasioned no impediment to the last voyage of Ulysses, from Phæacia to Ithaca, and cannot therefore be said to have persecuted him till he arrived at home.

According to this interpretation, the words

\[ \text{Ἀδητοὶ γὰρ ἐσα} \]

Πατροκλᾶς ὑπηρτὸς, ὁ δ’ ἐπιζηκὼς μενέκινοι

*Ἀντιδῆμο Ὀδυσσῆ, \[ \text{should be enclosed in a parenthesis.} \]
ARGUMENT
OF THE
SEVENTH BOOK.

Nausicaa returns from the river, whom Ulysses follows. He halts, by her direction, at a small distance from the palace, which at a convenient time he enters. He is well received by Alcinoüs and his Queen; and having related to them the manner of his being cast on the shore of Scheria, and received from Alcinoüs the promise of safe conduct home, retires to rest.

BOOK VII.

So pray'd Ulysses in the grove; mean-time
Drawn by her sturdy mules the royal maid
The city reach'd, and at her Father's house Magnificent arrived, the sumpter-wain
Stopp'd in the vestibule; her brothers five,
All godlike youths, assembling quick around,
Released the mules, and bore the raiment in.
Mean-time, to her own chamber she return'd,

Where
Where, soon as she arrived, an antient dame
Eurymedusa, by peculiar charge
Attendant on that service, kindled fire.
Sea-rovers her had from Epirus brought Long since, and to Alcinoüs she had fall’n
By public gift, for that he govern’d all
Phæacia, and as oft as he harangued
The multitude, was rev’renced as a God.*
She waited on the fair Naupèa, she
Her fuel kindled, and her food prepared.
And now Ulysses from his seat arose
To seek the city, whom his heav’ly friend
Minerva in impenetrable mist
Involved, left some Phæacian should insult
His ear with questions—Who, and whence were He?
Then, when within few paces he arrived
Of that fair city, meeting him, in form
A little maid, bearing her pitcher forth,
She stood before him, and the noble Chief,
Unconscious of the Goddess thus enquired.
Child! wilt thou not conduct me to the house
Of great Alcinoüs, Sov’reign of the land?

* It is Clarke’s opinion that she had neither been captivated in war (for the Phæacians waged no wars) nor obtained by purchase, but seized by pirates according to the common practice of the Antients.
For I arrive a stranger here, forlorn,
And from a distant shore, and all who dwell
In all this country are unknown to me.

To whom the Goddesses of the azure-eyes.
My stranger-friend! the mansion of thy search
Myself will shew thee; for not distant dwells
Alcinoüs from my father's own abode:
But hush! be silent—I will lead the way;
Mark no man; question no man; for the sight
Of strangers is unusual here, and cold
The welcome by this people shown to such.
They, trusting in swift ships, by the free grant
Of Neptune traverse his wide waters, borne
As if on wings, or with the speed of thought.

So spake the Goddess, and with nimble pace
Led on, whose footsteps he, as quick, pursued.
But still the seaman-throng through whom he pass'd Perceiv'd him not; Minerva, Goddesses dread,
That sight forbidding them, whose eyes she dimm'd
With darkness shed miraculous around
Her fav'rite Chief. Ulysses, wond'ring, mark'd

* How comes it then to pass that they are represented as so extremely hospitable in the sequel? Perhaps the vulgar only are intended in this description; or more probably, as the Scholiast observes, Minerva gives them this character to guard Ulysses against the danger of troublesome and impertinent enquiry, to which he would be exposed should he make any enquiries himself.—B. & C.
Their port, their ships, their forum the resort
Of Heroes, and their battlements sublime
Fenced with sharp stakes around, a glorious show!
But when the King’s august abode he reach’d,
Then Pallas thus instructed him again.

My father! thou behold’st the house to which Thou bad’st me lead thee. Thou shalt find our Chiefs
And high-born Princes banquetting within.
But enter fearing nought, for boldest men
Speed ever best, come whencesoe’er they may *.
First thou shalt find the Queen, Areta named.
Lineal in her descent is she from those Who gave Alcinoüs birth, her royal spouse.
Neptune begat Nausithoüs, at the first,
On Peribæa, loveliest of her sex,
Latest-born daughter of Eurymedon,
Heroic King of the proud giant race,
Who, losing all his impious people, shared
The same dread fate himself. Her Neptune lov’d
To whom she bore a son, the mighty prince Nausithoüs, King of the Phaeacian race.
Nausithoüs himself two sons begat, Rhexenor and Alcinoüs. Phoebus flew

* The same sentiment is found in a fragment of Menander.

Οὐκ ἦστι τὸλµης ἥδειν μὲτὰν βίον.
The best viaticum through life is courage.—C.
Rhexenor at his home, a bridegroom yet,
Who, father of no son, one daughter left,
Areta, wedded to Alcinoüs now,
And whom the Sov'reign in such honour holds,
As woman none enjoys of all the earth
Whose house is subject to an husband's pow'r*. Such honours have attended long, and still Attend her, from her children, from himself
Alcinoüs, and from all Phæacia's race,
Who, gazing on her as she were divine,
Shout when she moves in progress through the town.
For she no wisdom wants, but sits, herself,
Arbitress of such contests as arise
Between her fav'rites, and decides aright†.

* Alcinoüs therefore was the uncle of his wife, and we have seen more than one instance in the Iliad of a man wedded to his, niece. This double relationship was not uncommon among the Greeckians.—B.

† Barnes, referring his reader to Onomacritus and Apollonius Rhodius, gives the following instance of Areta acting in her judicial capacity. When the ambassadors of Æeta, in the name of their master, demanded from Alcinoüs that his daughter Medea, who had forsaken him and fled to Phæacia with Jafon, should be restored to him, and Alcinoüs was willing to comply, considering the condition as a reasonable one, his Queen immediately interposed this condition—If she were still a virgin, she might go;
otherwise she was Jafon's wife, and they ought not to be separated.
Jafon, being privately informed of the terms, instantly qualified the fugitive to claim him as her husband, and she was protected accordingly.
If she once favour thee, thou may'st indulge
The hope, thenceforth, to see again thy friends,
Thy mansion, and to tread thy native shore.

So saying, the Goddesfs of the azure-eyes
From pleasant Scheria o'er the barren Deep Glided to Marathon, which left afar,
In spacious Athens she arrived, and found,
Beneath Erechtheus' glorious roof, her home*.

Ulysses, then, toward the palace moved
Of King Alcinoüs, but immersed in thought
Stood, firft, and paused, ere with his foot he press'd
The brazen threshold; for a light he saw
As of the sun or moon illumining clear
The palace of Phæacia's mighty King.

Walls plated bright with brasfs, on either side
Stretch'd from the portal to th'interior house,
With azure cornice crown'd; the doors were gold
Which shut the palace faft; silver the posts
Rear'd on a brazen threshold, and above,
The lintels, silver, architraved with gold.

Mastiffs, in gold and silver, lined the approach
On either side, with art celestial framed

By Vulcan, guardians of Alcinoüs' gate

* Marathon was a place so named in Attica; and when Pallas is said to enter the house of Erechtheus, the meaning is that she entered her own temple, in which Erechtheus had his education.—B. & C.
For ever, unobnoxious to decay.
Sheer from the threshold to the inner house
Fixt thrones the walls, through all their length, adorn'd,
With mantles overspread of subtlest warp
Transparent, work of many a female hand.
On these the princes of Phæacia sat
Holding perpetual feasts, while golden youths
On all the sumptuous altars stood, their hands
With burning torches charg'd, which, night by night,
Shed radiance over all the festive throng.
Full fifty female menials serv'd the King
In household offices; the rapid mills
These turning, pulverize the mellow'd grain,
Those, seated orderly, the purple fleece
Wind off, or ply the loom, restless as leaves
Of lofty poplars fluttering in the breeze;
Bright as with oil the new-wrought texture thone.
Far as Phæacian mariners all else
Surpass, the swift ship urging through the floods,

* Some affirm that these mastives were given by Juno to Neptune as the price of his assistance against Jupiter, and that from Neptune they had passed to Alcinoüs.—B. & C.

† Καρποσίων δ' ἰθοινών ἀπολλείται ζυγὸν ἰαίνων.
Pope has given no translation of this line in the text of his work, but has translated it in a note. It is variously interpreted by commentators; the sense which is here given of it is that recommended by Eustathius.
So far in tissue-work the women pass
All others, by Minerva's self endow'd
With richest fancy and superior skill.
Without the court, and to the gates adjoin'd
A spacious garden lay, fenced all around
Secure, four acres measuring complete.
There grew luxuriant many a lofty tree,
Pomegranate, pear, the apple blushing bright,
The honied fig, and unctuous olive smooth.
Those fruits, nor winter's cold nor summer's heat Fear ever, fail not, wither not, but hang Perennial, while unceasing zephyr breathes Gently on all, enlarging these, and those Maturing genial; in an endless course
Pears after pears to full dimensions swell,
Figs follow figs, grapes clust'ring grow again
Where clusters grew, and (ev'ry apple stript)
The boughs soon tempt the gath'r'er as before.
There too, well-rooted, and of fruit profuse,
His vineyard grows; part, wide-extended, basks
In the sun's beams; the arid level glows;
In part they gather, and in part they tread
The wine-pres's, while, before the eye, the grapes
Here put their blossom forth, there, gather fast
Their blackness. On the garden's verge extreme Flow'rs of all hues smile all the year, arranged
With neatest art judicious, and amid
The lovely scene two fountains welling forth,
One visits, into ev'ry part diffused,
The garden-ground, the other soft beneath
The threshold steals into the palace-court,
Whence ev'ry citizen his vase supplies.

Such were the ample blessings on the house
Of King Alcinoüs by the Gods bestow'd.

Ulysses wonder'd stood, and when, at length,
Silent he had the whole fair scene admired,
Enter'd with hafty step the royal gate.
The Chiefs he found and Senators within Libation pouring to the vigilant spy
Mercurius, whom with wine they worshipp'd last
Of all the Gods, and at the hour of rest *.
Ulysses, circumfused with thickest shades
By Pallas still, pass'd on, till he arrived
Where King Alcinoüs and Areta sat.
Around Areta's knees his arms he cast,

* Because Mercury gave sleep by the touch of his rod, and because he delivered his messages in dreams and visions of the night; but chiefly, according to Plutarch, because he of all the Gods was most attentive to the discourse that passed on convivial occasions, and most concerned in the inspiration of such as was agreeable.—C.

This last libation was called the 'Αγαθή Δαιμονος πόμα.—B.
And, in that moment, the mysterious cloud
Which veil'd his godlike form, all broke away.
Amazement feized the guests; in mute suspence
They eyed the Chief, who thus his suit preferr'd.

Areta, daughter of the Godlike Prince
Rhexenor! after num'rous woes sustain'd,
Behold me here a suppliant at thy knees,
Imploring thee, the King, and these your guests,
(To whom heav'n grant abundance, and to leave
Their children in possessiion of the wealth
And all the well-earn'd honours, now their own)
That ye vouchsafe me swift conveyance hence
To my regretted home, which, tempest-toss'd
And wretched, I have fought long time in vain.

Such suit he made, and in the ashes sat
At the hearth-side; they mute long time remain'd,
Till, at the last, the antient Hero spake
Echeneus, eldest of Phæacia's sons,
With eloquence beyond the rest endow'd,
Rich in traditionary lore, and wise
In all, who thus, benevolent; began.

Not honourable to thyself, O King!
Is such a fight, a stranger on the ground,
Seated beside the hearth, and in the dust,
Mean-time, thy guests, expecting thy command,
Move not; thou therefore raising by his hand

The
The suppliant, lead him to a seat, and bid
The heralds mingle wine, that we may pour Libation forth to thunder-bearing Jove,
Dread guardian of the suppliant stranger's rights;
Then bid the fewer spread for his regale
A plenteous board, with viands now within.

Soon as those words Alcinoüs heard, the King,
Uprising by his hand the prudent Chief
Ulysses from the hearth, he made him fit
On a bright throne, displacing for his fake Laodamas his son, the virtuous youth
Who sat beside him, and whom most he lov'd.
And now, a maiden charg'd with golden ew'r
And with an argent laver, pouring, first,
Pure water on his hands, before him placed
A polish'd table, which the matron, charged
With service of the guests, with bread supplied
And viands largely, from her present stores
Then ate the Hero toil-inured, and drank,
And to his herald thus Alcinoüs spake.

Pontonoüs! mingle wine, and bear it round
To ev'ry guest in turn, that we may pour

* It is remarked that Ulysses in this poem washes his hands ere he eats, which neither he nor any other hero does in the Iliad. The reason of the difference, says Athenæus, is, that in the Odyssey we have the customs that belonged to a time of peace, when there was leisure for neatness and self-indulgence.—C.
To thunder-bearer Jove, the stranger's friend,
And guardian of the suppliant's sacred rights.

He ended, and Pontonoüs, as he bade,
Mingling delicious wine, the cups dispensed
With distribution regular to all.
When each had made libation, and had drunk
Sufficient, then, Alcinoüs thus began.

Phæacian Chiefs and Senators, attend
While I pronounce the dictates of my heart!
Ye all have feasted—To your homes and sleep.
We will assemble at the dawn of day
More senior Chiefs, that we may entertain
The stranger here, and to the Gods perform
Due sacrifice; the convoy that he asks
Shall next engage our thoughts, that free from pain
And from vexation, by our friendly aid
He may revisit, joyful and with speed,
His native shore, however far remote.
No inconvenience let him feel or harm,
Ere his arrival; but, arrived, thenceforth
He must endure whatever lot the Fates
Spun for him in the moment of his birth.
But should he prove some Deity from heav'n
Descended, then the Immortals have in view
Designs not yet apparent; for the Gods
Have deign'd not seldom, from of old, to mix
In our solemnities; have fill'd a seat
Where We have fat, and made our banquet theirs.
And even if a single traveller
Of the Phaeacians meet them, all reserve
They lay aside; for with the Gods we boast
As near affinity as do themselves
The Cyclops, or the Giant race profane*

To whom Ulysses, ever-wise, replied.
Alcinoüs! think not so. Resemblance none
In figure or in lineaments I bear
To the immortal tenants of the skies,
But to the sons of earth; if ye have known
A man afflicted with a weight of woe Peculiar, let me be with him compared;
Woes even passing his could I relate,
And all inflicted on me by the Gods.
But let me eat, comfortless as I am,
Uninterrupted; for no call is loud
As that of hunger in the ears of man;
Importunate, unreason'nable, it constrains
His notice, more than all his woes beside.

* The Scholium explains the passage thus—We resemble the Gods in righteousness as much as the Cyclops and Giants resembled each other in impiety.—B.& C. But in this sense of it there is something intricate, and contrary to Homer's manner. We have seen that they derived themselves from Neptune, which sufficiently justifies the above interpretation.
So, I much sorrow feel, yet not the less
Hear I the blatant appetite demand
Due sustenance, and with a voice that drowns
E'en all my suff'ring, till itself be fill'd."
But expedite ye at the dawn of day
My safe return into my native land,
After much mis'ry; and let life itself
Forfake me, may I but once more behold
My fair possessions, my domestic train,
And the high-vaulted roof my former home.

He spake, whom all applauded, and advised,
Unanimous, the guest's conveyance home,
Who had so fitly spoken. When, at length,
All had libation made, and were sufficed,
Departing to his house, each sought repose.
But still Ulysses in the hall remain'd,
Alcinoüs and Areta at his side;
And while their busy menials clear'd the board,

* Athenæus reproaches Ulysses with gluttony on this occasion, and observes that however hungry he might be, his hunger afforded no excuse for want of civility.—B. & C. But when Athenæus was thus rigorous in his demand of good manners, his patience probably had not been exercised with a fast of many days. Ulysses indeed had lately eaten by the bounty of Nausicaa; but seamen who have been reduced to short allowance, or for some time to absolute famine, well know that the return of appetite even after a plentiful meal, is almost immediate. The Heroes of Homer may not always be polite, but they always behave naturally.

Areta
Are ta (for his mantle and his vest Wrought by her women and herself; she knew)
In accents wing’d with eager haste began.

Stranger! the first inquiry shall be mine;
Who art, and whence? From whom receiv’dst thou these?
Saidst not—I came a wand’rer o’er the Deep?

To whom Ulysses, ever-wise, replied.
Oh Queen! the task were difficult to unfold
In all its length the story of my woes,
For I have num’rous from the Gods receiv’d;
But I will answer thee as best I may.

There is a certain isle, Ogygia, placed
Far distant in the Deep; there dwells, by man
Alike unvisited, and by the Gods,
Calypso, lovely nymph, but deeply skill’d
In artifice, and terrible in pow’r,
Daughter of Atlas. Me alone my fate
Her miserable inmate made, when Jove
Had riv’n asunder with his candent bolt
My bark in the mid-sea. There perish’d all
The valiant partners of my toils, and I
My vessel’s keel embracing day and night
With folded arms, nine days was borne along.
But on the tenth dark night, as pleas’d the Gods,
They drove me to Ogygia’s island, where

Calypso,
Calypso, dread Divinity, resides.*
She rescued, cherished, fed me, and her wish
Was to confer on me immortal life,
Exempt for ever from the sap of age.
But me her offer'd boon sway'd not. Sev'n years
I there abode continual, with my tears
Bedewing ceaseless my ambrosial robes,
Calypso's gift divine; but when, at length,
(Sev'n years elaps'd) the circling eighth arrived,
She then, herself, my quick departure thence Advised, by Jove's own mandate overaw'd,
Which even her had influenced to a change.
Borne on a well-join'd raft she sent me forth
With num'rous presents; bread the put and wine
On board, and cloth'd me in immortal robes;

* Longinus considers this ten-days distress of Ulysses, during which he had neither rest nor sustenance, as a symptom of the declension of Homer's genius, and as a proof that he began to dream.—B. & C. Barnes vindicates the poet against the charge by alleging that he is to be understood in a qualified sense, not as representing Ulysses destitute entirely of all sustenance, but of his usual diet only.—B.

But what sustenance could he procure, or how could he possibly preserve any while he clung to the keel of his vessel?

The Scholiast's is therefore the best justification of the passage who says—It is unreasonable to ask how he subsisted—for does not Minerva in the 20th book inform him

Αὐτὰρ ἢν Θεὸς εὑρί, διαματίσεις ἐν σε φιλάσσω Ἐν πᾶσισι ποιοίσι. ———— B. & C.

But I, who keep
Thee in all difficulties, am divine.

She
She sent before me also a fair wind
Fresh-blowing, but not dang'rous. Sev'nteen days
I fail'd the flood, and, on the eighteenth, saw
Your lofty mountain-tops with forests crown'd,
And seeing them rejoiced; but premature
Was that delight, and soon by Neptune changed
To deepest woe; for he with adverse winds
My course resisted, and with billows huge Shatt'ring my raft, constrain'd me sore distress'd
And groaning, to divide with wearied arms
This vast abyss of ocean, till the winds
And mighty waters cast me on your shore.
Me there emerging, had the tempest driv'n
Full on the land, where, incommodious most,
The shore presented only roughest rocks,
But, leaving it, I swam the Deep again,
Until at last a river's gentle stream Receiv'd me, by no rocks deform'd, and where No violent winds the shelter'd bank annoy'd.
I flung myself on shore, exhausted, weak,
Needing repose; then came the silent night,
And from the Jove-descended stream withdrawn,
I in a thicket lay'd me down on leaves
Which I had heap'd together, and the Gods
O'erwhelm'd my eye-lids with a flood of sleep.
There under wither'd leaves, forlorn, I slept

All
All the long night, the morning and the noon;
But balmy sleep, at the decline of day,
Broke from me; then, your daughter’s train I heard
Sporting, with whom she also sported, fair
And graceful as the Gods*. To her I kneel’d.
She swerved not from the dictates of a mind
Most pure, but pass’d in her behaviour all
Which even ye could from an age like hers
Have hoped; for youth is ever indiscretion.
She gave me plenteous food, with richest wine
Refresh’d my spirit, taught me where to bathe,
And cloth’d me as thou see’st; thus, though a prey
To many sorrows, I have told thee truth.

To whom Alcinoüs answer thus return’d.
Stranger! my daughter overlook’d at least One rule of decent manners; for although She first receiv’d thee suppliant, she return’d
With all her women, and thee left to find
These doors, unfriended, and without a guide.

Then answer, thus, the wary Chief return’d.
Blame not, O Hero, for so flight a cause
Thy faultless child; she bade me follow them,

* Euclid deemed it worthy of remark that Ulysses makes no mention of their daughter’s singing and tossing the ball, left he should seem to accuse her of levity. But he expressly says that her women amused themselves with play, and that she was among them.—C.
But I refused, by fear and awe restrain'd,
Left thou should'st feel displeasure at that sight
Thyself; for we are all, in ev'ry clime,
Suspicious, and to worst constructions prone.

So spake Ulysses, to whom thus the King.
I bear not, stranger! in my breast an heart
Much giv'n to causeless wrath, yet due respect
To decency's demands require from all.
And Jove, Apollo, and Minerva know
How fervent is my wish, that being such,
And of such kindred sentiments with mine,
Thou would'st accept my daughter, would'st become My son-in-law, and dwell contented here*.
House would I give thee, and possessions too,
Were such thy choice; else, if thou choose it not,
No man in all Phæacia shall by force
Detain thee. Jove would disapprove the deed.
For proof, I will appoint thee convoy hence
To-morrow; and while thou by sleep subdued

* The Scholiast judges that Alcinoiis makes this offer merely as a trial and test of the veracity of Ulysses. If he had refused Calypso, he would of course refuse his daughter, but if he accepted his daughter, it could not then be true that he had refused Calypso. —B.&C. But Clarke affirms that the remark is groundless, since we are assured by Eustathius that it was customary with the Antients to give their daughters, not to people of their own country by preference, but rather, if they had opportunity, to some accomplished stranger.
Shalt press thy bed, my people with their oars
Shall brush the placid flood, till thou arrive
At home, or at what place soe’er thou would’st, Though far more distant than Eubœa lies,
Remotest isle from us, by the report
Of ours, who saw it when they thither bore
Sage Rhadamanthus of the golden locks
To visit earth-born Tityus *. To that isle
They went; they reach’d it, and they brought him thence Back to Phæacia, in one day, with ease.
Thou also shalt be taught what ships I boast
Unmatch’d in swiftness, and how far my crews
Excel, upturning with their oars the brine.

He ended, whom Ulysses in his heart
Exulting heard, and, praying, thus replied.

Eternal Father! may the King perform
His whole kind promise! grant him in all lands
A never-dying name, and grant to me
To visit safe my native shores again †!

Thus

* Jupiter being enamoured of Elora daughter of Orchomenus, or as others say, of Minos, to avoid the jealousy of Juno, concealed her underground. There she bore him this most extraordinary son, named Tityus, who was beloved by Latona and shot by Apollo.—Rhadamanthus is supposed to have made this visit to Tityus on a charitable account, and, being himself a just man, for the sake of instructing him.—B. & C.

† Ulysses gives not a direct answer to the obliging proposal of Alcinoüs to bestow on him his daughter, because it would have Thus they conferr'd; and now Areta bade
Her fair attendants dress a fleecy couch
Beneath the portico, with purple rugs
Resplendent, and with arras spread beneath,
And over all with cloaks of shaggy pile.
Forth went the maidens, bearing each a torch,
And, as she bade, prepared in haste a couch
Of depth commodious; then, returning, gave Ulysses welcome summons to repose.

Rise, stranger! all is ready; come to rest.
So they; thrice welcome to Ulysses seem'd
Their invitation, and his sculptur'd couch
Beneath the sounding portico prepared
With willing feet the toil-worn Hero fought;
But far within th' interior palace slept
Alcinoüs, and, lodg'd in royal state,
The Queen, his virtuous confort, at his side.

seemed harsh to refuse her. His prayer, expressive as it is of his impatience to return, and of his gratitude to the person who furnishes him with means of doing so, is an indirect indeed, but a delicate and sufficient answer.—Dacier.
ARGUMENT
OF THE
EIGHTH BOOK.

The Phæacians consult on the subject of Ulysses. Preparation is made for his departure. Antinoüs entertains them at his table. Games follow the entertainment. Demodocus the bard, sings, first the loves of Mars and Venus, then the introduction of the wooden horse into Troy. Ulysses, much affected by his song, is questioned by Alcinoüs, whence, and who he is, and what is the cause of his sorrow.

BOOK VIII.

Soon as Aurora, daughter of the dawn
Look'd forth, upsprang Phæacia's mighty King,
And from his couch the town-destroying Chief Ulysses hastened, whom Alcinoüs led To early council at the ships convened.
Arriving, side by side on polish'd stones
They sat; mean-time, Minerva in the form
Of King Alcinoüs' herald ranged the town,
With purpose to accelerate the return
Of brave Ulysses to his native home,
And thus to ev'ry Chief the Goddess spake *

Phæacian Chiefs and Senators, away!
To council hasting, hear a stranger's tale,
A guest of King Alcinoüs, new-arrived,
A shipwreck'd wand'rer hither, of a form
Superiour, and majestic as a God.

So saying, she roused the people, and at once
The seats of all the senate-court were fill'd
With fast-assembling throngs, no few of whom Had mark'd Ulysses with admiring eyes.
Then, Pallas o'er his head and shoulders broad Diffusing grace celestial, his whole form
Dilated, and to flatelier height advanced,
That worthier of all rev'rence he might seem,
To the Phæacians, and might many a feat
Achieve, with which they should his force assay *.

* By Minerva we are to understand here, either a rumour that a very intelligent stranger had arrived in their country, on whose account they are called together, or that the Phæacians by their natural discernment finding Ulysses to be a person of that description, a rarity among themselves, assemble for satisfaction of their curiosity and to prove if the account of him be a true one.—
Euæthius.—C.

+ The poet pluralizes the single effort with the dijēus, probably because, though Ulysses performed no feat beside, he offered him-sell to a trial in many others, excepting against the foot-race only.
Minerva therefore thus improves his figure, that it may evidence the justness of his pretensions.
When, therefore, the assembly now was full, Alcinoüs, thus addressing them, began.

Phæacian Chiefs and Senators attend,
That I may speak as my best judgment bids.
This guest, unknown to me, hath, wand'ring, found
My palace, either from the East arrived,
Or from some nation on our western side.
Safe conduct home he asks, and our consent:
Here wishes ratified, whose quick return
Be it our part, as usual, to promote;
For at no time the stranger, from what coast
Soc'er, who hath resorted to our doors,
Hath long complained of his detention here.
Haste—draw ye down into the sacred Deep
A vessel of prime speed, and, from among The people, fifty and two youths select,
Approved the best; then, lashing fast the oars,
Leave her, that at my palace ye may make Short feast, for which myself will all provide.
Thus I enjoin the crew; but as for those Of sceptred rank, I bid them all alike
To my own board, that here we may regale
The stranger nobly, and let none refuse.
Call, too, Demodocus, the bard divine,
To share my banquet, whom the Gods have blest
With pow'rs of song delectable, what theme

Soc'er
Soe'er his animated fancy choose:

He ceas'd, and led the way, whom follow'd all
The sceptred senators, and at his house
Mean-time an herald sought the bard divine.
Then, fifty mariners and two, from all
The rest selected, to the coast repair'd,
And, from her station on the sea-bank, launched
The galley down into the sacred Deep.
They placed the canvas and the mast on board,
Arranged the oars, unfurl'd the shining sail,
And, leaving her in depth of water moor'd,
Resorted to the Sov'reign's grand abode.
There, soon, the portico, the court, the hall
Were fill'd with multitudes of young and old,
For whose regale the mighty monarch flew
Two beeves, twelve sheep, and twice four fatted brawns.
They flay'd them first, then busily their task
Administering, prepared the joyous feast.
And now the herald thither led with care
The tuneful bard; him partially the Mufe
And dearly lov'd, yet gave him good and ill;
She quench'd his sight, but gave him strains divine.*

For

* As in the Iliad, says Euflathius, the poet deals out good and evil from his two casks respectively, so here he represents the Mufe as dispensing the same mixture to Demodocus. And it was the opinion
For him, Pontonoüs in the midst disposed
An argent-studded throne, thrusting it close
To a tall column, where he hung his lyre
Above his head, and taught him where it hung.
He set before him, next, a polish'd board
And basket, and a goblet fill'd with wine
For his own use, and at his own command *
Then, all assail'd at once the ready feast,
And when nor hunger more nor thirst they felt,
Then came the muse, and roused the bard to sing
Exploits of men renown'd; it was a song,
In that day, to the highest heav'n extoll'd †.
He fang the fierce dispute which at a feast
In honour of the Gods at Ilium, chanced

The Scholiast asks, if the Muse deprived him of sight, how then can she be said to have loved him? A question which he answers by observing that the Blind being disqualified for other employments, have the more leisure for poetry.—B. & C.

* Clarke on this sentence quotes an epigram of the Anthologia, Lib. II. 47.

Αὐτοδίλης νόσος δεὶ πίπτως.
The happiest, always is the glass
Which we are free to drink or pass.

† The poet is here supposed by Eustathius to allude to the Iliad.—C.
Between Achilles and Laertes' son.
That contest, Agamemnon, King of men,
Between those Princes of his host, remark'd
With silent joy; for when in Pytho* erst
He pass'd the marble threshold to consult
The oracle of Apollo, such dispute
The voice divine had to his ear announced;
For then it was that, first, the storm of war
Came rolling on, ordain'd long time to afflict
Troy and the Greeksians, by the will of Jove.+

So sang the bard illustrious; then his robe
Of purple dye with both hands o'er his head
Ulysses drew, behind its ample folds
Veiling his face, through fear to be observed
By the Phæacians weeping at the song;
And ever as the bard harmonious ceased,
He wiped his tears, and, drawing from his brows
The mantle, pour'd libation to the Gods.
But when the Chiefs (for they delighted heard

* A city of Phocis named also Delphos, famous for the temple and oracle of Pythian Apollo.

+ Agamemnon having enquired at Delphos, at what time the Trojan war should end, was answered, that the conclusion of it should happen at a time when a dispute should arise between two of his principal commanders. That dispute occurred at the time here alluded to, Achilles recommending force as most likely to reduce the city, and Ulysses feantagem,—B, & C.
Those sounds) solicited again the bard,
And he renew’d the strain, then cov’ring close
His count’nance, as before, Ulysses wept.
Thus, unperceiv’d by all, the Hero mourn’d,
Save by Alcinoüs; he alone his tears
(Beside him seated) mark’d, and his deep sighs O’erhearing, the Phæacians thus bespake.

Phæacia’s Chiefs and Senators, attend!
We have long time sat feasting, and long time
Sat liss’ning to the lyre, companion sweet
And seasonable of the festive hour.
Now go we forth for honourable proof
Of our address in games of ev’ry kind,
That this our guest may to his friends report,
At home arrived, that none like us have learn’d
To leap, to box, to wrestle, and to run.

So saying, he led them forth, whose steps the guests
All follow’d, and the herald hanging high
The sprightly lyre, took gently by his hand
Demodocus, and leading him abroad
Follow’d Phæacia’s Princes to the games.
They fought the forum; countless swarm’d the throng Behind them as they went, and many a youth
Strong and courageous to the strife arose,
Upfiood Acroneus and Ocyalus, Elatreus, Nauteus, Prymneus, after whom

Anchialus
Anchialus with Anabeosineus
Arose, Eretmeus, Ponteus, Proreus bold,
Amphialus and Thoön *. Then arose,
In aspect dread as homicidal Mars,
Euryalus, and for his graceful form (After Laodamas) distinguish’d most Of all Phæacia’s sons, Naubolides.
Three also from Alcinoüs sprung, arose,
Laodamas, his eldest; Halius, next,
His second-born; and godlike Clytoneus.
Of these, some started for the runner’s prize.
They gave the race its limits †. All at once
Along the dusty champaign swift they flew.
But Clytoneus, illustrious youth, outstripp’d
All competition; far as mules surpaß
Slow oxen furrowing the fallow ground,
So far before all others he arrived
Victorious, where the throng’d spectators flood.
Some tried the wrestler’s toil severe, in which Euryalus superior proved to all.

* The Phæacians being a maritime people, these names are all derived from maritime subjects. — C.

† Τεύτων ἀπὸ οὐσίας τίτωτο ὁμίλοι—This expression is by the commentators generally understood to be significant of the effort which they made at starting, but it is not improbable that it relates merely to the measurement of the course, otherwise, καρπαλιμος ἐπίτοντο—will be tautologous.
In the long leap Amphialus prevail'd;
Elatreus most successful hurl'd the quoit,
And at the cestus, last, the noble son
Of Scheria's King, Laodamas excell'd *.

When thus with contemplation of the games,
All had been gratified, Alcinoüs' son
Laodamas, arising, them address'd †.

Friends! ask we now the stranger, if he boast Proficiency in aught. His figure seems Not ill; in thighs, and legs, and arms he shews
Much strength, and in his brawny neck; nor youth
Hath left him yet, though batter'd he appears
With num'rous troubles, and misfortune-flaw'd.
Nor know I hardships in the world so sure
To break the strongest down, as those by sea.

Then answer thus Euryalus return'd.
Thou hast well said, Laodamas; thyself
Approaching, speak to him, and call him forth.

Which when Alcinoüs' noble offspring heard,
Advancing from his seat, amid them all
He stood, and to Ulysses thus began.

Stand forth, oh guest, thou also; prove thy skill

* In boxing.
† The poet having already given us a description at large of similar contests at the funeral of Patroclus, judiciously speaks of these in the most summary manner.—C.
(If any such thou boast) in games like ours,
Which, likeliest, thou hast learn'd; for greater praise
Hath no man, while he lives, than that he know
His feet to exercise and hands aright.

Come, then; make trial; scatter wide thy cares;
We will not hold thee long; the ship is launch'd
Already, and the crew stand all prepared.

To whom replied the wily Chief renown'd.
Wherefore, as in derision, have ye call'd
Me forth, Laodamias, to these exploits?
No games have I, but many a grief, at heart,
And with far other struggles worn, here fit
Desirous only of conveyance home,
For which both King and people I implore.

Then him Euryalus aloud reproach'd,
I well believed it, friend! in thee the guise

* Exactly the same sentiment is found in Pindar, Pythior. Od X.
  ver. 34, a very natural one in an age when the most enviable public honours were bestowed on preeminent force and agility.

----- ευαντὸς ὕτος ----
'Ανήρ γίνεται σωφρός,
"Ο; ὁ Χαρῶν, ἡ ποδῶν ἀετῶν
Κράτησε, τὰ μέγα, ἀυθλῶν ἥλιων
Τῶμας τε και σφίνη.—C.

The praises of the wife his toils repay,
Who, whether hand or foot be tried,
With force and valour on his side
Excels, and bears the noblest prize away.

I see
I see not of a man expert in feats
Athletic, of which various are perform'd
In ev'ry land; thou rather seem'st with ships
Familiar; one, accustom'd to control
Some crew of trading mariners; well-learn'd
In stowage, pilotage, and wealth acquired
By rapine, but of no gymnastic pow'rs.

To whom Ulysses, frowning dark, replied.
Thou hast ill spoken, sir, and like a man
Regardless whom he wrongs. Thus heav'n, it seems,
Imparts not, all to one, the various gifts
And ornaments of body, mind and speech*.
This man in figure less excels, yet Jove
Crowns him with eloquence; his hearers charm'd
Behold him, while with unassuming tone
He bears the prize of fluent speech from all,
And, when he walks the city, as they pass,

* ἄλλ' εἰ γὰρ ὅντις πάρτ' ἐπὶστασθ' ἑξέτασ Πέργην, ἄλλα δ' ἀλλο πράσκιται γίρας.*
Σι μὴ μάχισθαι τὸ; ὅι βελτίσθω καλέω.
Euripides. Rhei. ver. 106 — C.

Each hath his talent; of the human race
None e'er was born to universal skill;
Thou shin'st in battle, but in council they.

In like manner Maharbal in Livy, Book 22. § 51.
"The Gods impart not every thing to any. You, Annibal, know how to conquer, but are ignorant in the use of victory."
All turn and gaze as they had pass'd a God.
Another, form'd with symmetry divine,
Yet wants the grace that twines itself around
The lift'ning hearers' hearts. Such deem I thee.
Thy form is excellent. Not Jove himself
Could mend it. But thy mind is nothing worth.
Thou much hast moved me; thy unhandsome phrase
Hath roused my wrath; I am not, as thou say'st,
A novice in these sports, but took the lead
In all, while youth and strecth were on my side.
But I am now in bands of sorrow held,
And of misfortune, having much endured
In war, and buffetting the boist'rous waves.
Yet, though with mis'ry worn, I will esfay
My strength among you; for thy words had teeth
Whose bite hath pinch'd and pain'd me to the proof.
He said; and mantled as he was, sprang forth
And seized a quoit in bulk and weight all those Transcending far, by the Phaeacians used.
Swiftly he swung, and from his vig'rous hand Dismiss'd it. Sang the stone, and as it flew

* So Cicero de Oratore, L. iii. § 14.

"In whose presence do men shake with awe? Whom, while he speaks, do they contemplate with astonishment? Whom do they applaud with exclamations? and consider, if I may so say, as a God among them? 'The man who is distinct both in his words and matter, clear, abundant, luminous.'—C.
The maritime Phæacians low inclined
Their heads beneath it; over all the marks
It flew with ease, and struck the ground beyond.
Minerva in a human form, the cast
Prodigious measur'd, and aloud exclaim'd.

Stranger! the blind himself might with his hands
Feel out the 'vantage here, so far thy quoit
Hath left its best competitors behind.
This prize, be sure, is thine; for, of us all,
Thy measure none will reach, much less exceed.

She ceased; Ulysses, hardy Chief, rejoiced
That in the circus he had found a judge
So favourable, and with brisker tone,
As less in wrath, the multitude address'd.

Young men reach this, and I will quickly heave
Another such, or yet a heavier quoit.
Then, come the man whose courage prompts him forth
To box, to wrestle with me, or to run;
For ye have chafed me much, and I decline
No strife with any here, but challenge all Phæacia, save Laodamas alone.
He is mine host. Who combats with his friend?
To call to proof of hardiment the man
Who entertains him in a foreign land,
Would but evince the challenger a fool,
Who, so, should cripple his own interest there.
As for the rest, I none refuse, scorn none,
But wish for trial of you, and to match
In opposition fair my force with yours.
There is no game athletic in the use
Of all mankind, too difficult for me;
I handle well the polished bow, and first
Amid a thousand foes strike whom I mark,
Although a band of warriors on my side
At the same foe their num'rous arrows aim.
Of all the Grecians who at Ilium erst
Drew bow, the sole superiour to myself
Was Philoctetes; and of all mankind
Now living, I will yield to none besides.
Yet will I not profess myself expert
As some of antient times, as Hercules,
Or as Oechalian Eurytus, who durst
The Gods themselves in archery defy.
Soon, therefore, died huge Eurytus, ere yet

* So Euflathius understands the passage who thus observes on it—Ulysses is celebrated here as an expeditious archer, so quick, that though he were one among many shooting at the same time, his arrow would be the first to strike the enemy. But Dacier supposes the μᾶλλον ἀπελλάτω to refer to the adverse host, and Ulysses to affirm that though a multitude were prepared to shoot at Him, he would be nimbler than they, and send his arrow to the mark before them.

The former, however, of these two senses, is preferred by Clarke, and is certainly the more probable.
Old age he reach'd; him, angry to be call'd
To proof of archership, Apollo flew.
But if ye name the spear, mine flies a length
By no man's arrow reach'd; nor fear I foil
From the Phæacians, save in speed alone;
For I have suffer'd hardships, dash'd and drench'd
By many a wave, nor had I food on board
At all times, therefore am I much unstrung.*

He spake, and silent the Phæacians sat,
Of whom alone Alcinoüs thus replied.
Since, stranger, not ungraceful is thy speech,
Who haft but vindicated in our ears
Thy question'd prowefs, angry that this youth
Reproach'd thee in the presence of us all,
That no man qualified to give his voice
In public, might affront thy courage more;
Now mark me, therefore, that in time to come,
While feasting with thy children and thy spouse,
Thou may'st inform the Heroes of thy land

* By this, according to the Scholiast, he must be understood to mean, not that while his raft could swim he wanted sustenance, but after the wreck of it; yet Barnes understands the passage as a general observation only on the scanty fare of a mariner. An interpretation which Clarke rejects as unreasonable, because his vessel is said expressly to have been abundantly stored by Calypso with all things necessary; so that, till it was wrecked, he could not possibly feel a want of provisions.
That even we some skill can boast in arts
By Jove enjoin'd us in our fathers' days.
We boast not much the boxer's skill, nor yet
The wrestler's; but light-footed in the race
Are we, and navigators well-inform'd.
Our pleasures are the feast, the harp, the dance,
Garments for change; the tepid bath; the bed.
Come, ye Phæacians, beyond others taught
To tread the circus with harmonious steps,
Come, play before us; that our guest, arrived
In his own country, may inform his friends
How far in seamanship we all excel,
In running, in the dance, and in the song.
Hence, therefore, herald! Bring the tuneful bard
His lyre, left somewhere in our hall at home.

So spake the godlike King, at whose command
The herald to the palace quick return'd
To seek the charming lyre. Mean-time arose
Nine public umpires, officed to correct
All rude disturbance of the games, to smooth
The circus, to repress the curious throng,
And give the narrow'd ring an ampler round.
Then came the herald sent to seek the lyre,
With which supplied, Demodocus advanced
Into the middle area, where a band
Of blooming youths, all practis'd in the dance

Encircled
Encircled him. With nimble steps they smote
The sacred floor, so swift, that with amaze
Ulysses eyed them, dazzled at the sight.

And now Demodocus his tuneful chords
Adapted to a sprightlier strain, the loves
Of Mars and Cytherea chaplet crown'd;
How first, clandestine, they embraced beneath
The roof of Vulcan; her, by many a gift
Seduced, Mars won, and with adult'rous lust
The bed dishonour'd of the King of fire*.
The fun, a witness of their amorous sport,
Bore swift the tale to Vulcan; he, apprized
Of that foul deed, at once his smithy fought,
In secret darkness of his inmost soul
Contriving vengeance; to the flock he heav'd
His anvil huge, on which he forged a snare
Of bands indissoluble, by no art
To be untied, durance for ever firm.

* The Phaeacians being a licentious and effeminate people, are entertained by Demodocus with a song suited to their character.
Plato condemned it as having a tendency to debauch the morals, but Plutarch vindicates it as an intended lesson to the reader, that the sure way to become Phaeacians in heart, is to be such in practice, and that lewd songs accompanied with suitable music, will make a light and a lascivious hearer.—C.

Dionysius Hal. thinks it probable that this ludicrous episode furnished the first hint for Comedy.—C.
The net prepared, he bore it, fiery-wroth,
To his own chamber and his nuptial couch,
Where, stretching them from post to post, he wrapp'd
With those fine meshes all his bed around,
And hung them num'rous from the roof, diffused
Like spiders' filaments, which not the Gods
Themselves could see, so subtle were the toils.
When thus he had encircled all his bed
On ev'ry side, he feign'd a journey thence To Lemnos, of all cities that adorn
The earth, the city that he favours most.
Nor Mars, who reins with gold his fiery steeds,
Kept drowsy watch, but mark'd the going-forth
Of the illustrious artist from his home,
And thither flew, impatient to enjoy
The Goddess with the wreath-encircled brows.
She, newly from her potent Sire return'd
The son of Saturn, fat. Mars, ent'ring, seiz'd
Her snow-white hand, which grasping, thus he said.
To bed, my fair, and let us love! for lo!
Thine husband is from home, to Lemnos gone,
And to the Sintians, men of barb'rous speech.
He spake, nor she was loth, but bedward too
Like him inclined; so then, to bed they went,
And as they lay'd them down, down stream'd the net

Around
Around them, labour exquisite of hands
By ingenuity divine inform'd.
Small room they found, so prison'd; not a limb
Could either lift, or move, but felt at once
Entanglement from which was no escape.
And now, ere he had reach'd the Lemnian isle, Returning, (for his faithful spy the Sun
Had told him all) with aching heart approach'd
The limping Deity. Resentment boil'd
Within him; in his vestibule he stood,
And roar'd tremendous to the Pow'rs of heav'n.

Oh Jove! and all ye Pow'rs for ever blest!
Look forth, and witness with your eyes a sight
Both ludicrous and not to be endured.
Behold how Venus, for my lameness' sake,
Dishonours me, and loves the fiery Mars!
And wherefore? for that he is fair in form
And sound of foot, but feeble I and lame.
Whose fault is this? Their fault, and theirs alone
Who gave me being; ill-employed were they Begetting me, one, better far unborn.
See where they couch together on my bed
Lascivious! ah, sight hateful to my eyes!
Yet cooler wishes will they feel, I ween,
To press my bed hereafter; here to sleep
Will little please them, fondly as they love.

But
But these my toils and tangles will suffice
To hold them here, till Jove shall yield me back
Complete, the sum of all my nuptial gifts
Paid to him for the shameless trumpet's sake
His daughter, as incontinent as fair.

He said, and in the brazen-floor'd abode
Of Jove the Gods assembled. Neptune came Earth-circling Pow'r; came Hermes friend of man,
And, regent of the far-commanding bow,
Apollo also came; but coy reserve
Forbade the Goddesles to share the scene.
The Gods, by whose beneficence all live,
Stood in the portal; infinite arose
The laugh of heav'n, all looking down intent
On that shrewd project of the smith divine,
And, turning to each other, thus they said.

Bad works speed ill. The slow o'ertakes the swift.
So Vulcan, tardy as he is, by craft
Hath outstript Mars, although the fleetest far
Of all who dwell in heav'n, and the light-heel'd
Must pay the adult'rer's forfeit to the lame.

So spake the Gods; and thus in Hermes' ear
The King of radiant shafts, Apollo, next.
Jove's son, heav'n's herald, Hermes, bounteous God!
Would'st thou such stricture close of bands endure
For golden Venus lying at thy side?

Whom
Whom answer'd thus the messenger of heav'n.
Archer divine! yea, and with all my heart;
And be the bands which wind us round about Thrice these, innumerable, and let all
The Gods and Goddesses in heaven look on,
So I may lovely Venus clasp the while.

He spake; then laugh'd the Immortal pow'rs again.
But not so Neptune; he with earnest suit
The glorious artist urged to the release
Of Mars, and thus in accents wing'd he said.

Loose him; accept my promise; he shall pay
Full recompense in presence of us all.

To whom the glorious Artist of the skies.
Earth-circling Neptune! Spare me that demand.
Lame suitor, lame security*. What snares
Could I contrive that should imprison thee
In presence of the Gods, were Mars releas'd,
And free to leave both debt and bands behind?

Him answer'd then the Shaker of the shores.
I tell thee, Vulcan, that if Mars by flight

* The original line has received such a variety of interpretations, that a Translator seems free to choose. It has, however, a proverbial turn, which I have endeavoured to preserve, and have adopted that sense of the words which appears best to accord with what immediately follows. Vulcan pleads his own inability to enforce the demand, as a circumstance that made Neptune's promise unacceptable.

Shun
Shun payment, I will pay, myself, the fine.

To whom the glorious artist of the skies.
Thou must not, canst not, shalt not be refused.

So saying, the might of Vulcan loos'd the snare,
And they, detain'd by those coercive bands
No longer, from the couch upstarting, flew,
Mars into Thrace, and to her Paphian home
The Queen of smiles, where deep in myrtle groves
Her incense-breathing altar stands embow'r'd,
Her there, the Graces laved, and oils diffused
O'er all her form, ambrosial, such as add
Fresh beauty to the Gods for ever young,
And cloth'd her in the loveliest robes of heav'n.

Such was the theme of the illustrious bard.

Ulysses with delight that song, and all
The maritime Phæacian concourse heard.

Alcinoüs, then, (for in the dance they pass'd
All others) call'd his sons to dance alone, Halius and Laodamas; they gave
The purple ball into their hands, the work
Exact of Polybus; one, re-supine,
Upcast it high toward the dusky clouds,
The other, springing into air, with ease
Receiv'd it, ere he sank to earth again.
When thus they oft had sported with the ball
Thrown upward, next, with nimble interchange

They
They pas'd it to each other many a time,
Footling the plain, while every youth around
The circus clapp'd his hands, and from beneath
The din of stamping feet fill'd all the air.

Then, turning to Alcinoüs, thus the wise Ulysses spake. Alcinoüs! mighty King!
Illustrious above all Phæacia's sons!
Incomparable are ye in the dance,
Ev'n as thou said'st. Astonish'd I behold
Feats unperform'd but by yourselves alone.

His praise the King Alcinoüs with delight
Receiv'd, and the Phæacians thus bespake.
Phæacian Chiefs and Senators, attend!
Wisdom beyond the common stint I mark
In this our guest; good cause in my account,
For which we should present him with a pledge
Of hospitality and love. The Chiefs
Are twelve, who, highest in command, control
The people, and the thirteenth Chief am I.
Bring each a golden talent, with a vest
Well-bleach'd, and tunick; gratified with these,
The stranger to our banquet shall repair
Exulting; bring them all without delay;
And let Euryalus by word and gift
Appease him, for his speech was unadvised.

He ceas'd, whom all applauded, and at once
Each sent his herald forth to bring the gifts,
When thus Euryalus the King addres's'd.

Alcinoüs! o'er Phæacia's sons supreme!
I will appease the stranger, as thou bidd'ft.
This sword shall be his own, the blade all steel,
The hilt of silver, and the unfulled sheath
Of iv'ry recent from the carver's hand.
A gift like this he shall not need despise.

So saying, his silver-studded sword he gave Into his grasp, and, courteous, thus began.

Hail, honour'd stranger! and if word of mine
Have harm'd thee, rashly spoken, let the winds
Bear all remembrance of it swift away!
May the Gods give thee to behold again
Thy wife, and to attain thy native shore,
Whence absent long, thou haft so much endured!

To whom Ulyfles, ever-wise, replied.
Hail also thou, and may the Gods, my friend,
Grant thee felicity, and may never want
Of this thy sword touch thee in time to come,
By whose kind phrase appeas'd my wrath subsides!

So spake Ulyfles, and the glitt'ring sword
Athwart his shoulders flung. Now sank the sun,
And those rich gifts arrived, which to the house
Of King Alcinoüs the heralds bore.
Alcinoüs' sons receiv'd them, and beside Their royal mother placed the precious charge.
The King then led the way, at whose abode
Arrived, again they press'd their lofty thrones,
And to Areta thus the monarch spake.

Haste, bring a coffer; bring thy best, and store
A mantle and a sumptuous vest within;
Warm for him, next, a brazen bath, by which Refresh'd, and viewing in fair order placed
The noble gifts by the Phæacian Lords
Conferr'd on him, he may the more enjoy
Our banquet, and the bard's harmonious song.
I give him also this my golden cup
Splendid, elaborate; that, while he lives,
What time he pours libation forth to Jove
And all the Gods, he may remember me.

He ended, at whose words Areta bade
Her maidens with dispatch place o'er the fire
An ample tripod; they, at her command,
A tripod o'er the glowing embers placed,
Water infused, and kindled wood beneath.
The flames, encircling bright the bellied vase, Warm'd soon the flood within. Mean-time, the Queen Producing from her chamber-stores a chest
All-elegant, within it placed the gold
And raiment, gifts of the Phæacian Chiefs,
With her own gifts, the mantle and the vest,
And in wing’d accents to Ulysses said.

Now take, thyself, the coffer’s lid in charge;
Girdle it quickly with a cord, left loss
Befall thee on thy way, while thou perchance
Shalt sleep secure on board the sable bark.*

Which when illustrious Ulysses heard,
Closing the chest, he girded it around,
And with a knot most intricate, erewhile
By Circe taught him, made the cord secure.
And now, the mistress of the household charge
Summon’d him to his bath; he glad beheld
The steaming vase, uncustom’d to its use
E’ersince he left Ogygia, where he knew
No want of aught, attended like a God.
Now, therefore, once again by female hands
Laved and anointed, and with rich attire
Both vest and mantle served, he left the bath
With sprightlier steps, and sought the social hall
To share the feast of wine; but, as he pass’d, Nausicaa, to whom the Gods had giv’n
Surpassing beauty, saw him, where she stood
Beside the portal, with admiring eyes,

*Portable property was antiently secured by cords, the only practicable mode of guarding it till locks were invented.—C. But it was precarious, and therefore probably gave occasion to the exercise of much ingenuity in the art of knot-making.
And in wing'd accents thus the Chief address'd.

Hail, stranger! at thy native home arrived
Remember me, thy first deliv'rer here.

To whom Ulysses, ever-wife, replied.

Nausicaa! daughter of the noble King
Alcinoüs! So may Jove, high-thund'ring mate
Of Juno, grant me to behold again
My native land, and my delightful home,
As, even there, I will present my vows
To thee, adoring thee as I adore

The Gods themselves, virgin, by whom I live!

He said, and on his throne beside the King
Alcinoüs sat. And now they portion'd out
The feast to all, and charged the cups with wine,
And introducing by his hand the bard

Phæacia's glory, at the column's side

The herald placed Demodocus again.

Then, carving forth a portion from the loins
Of a huge brawn, of which uneaten still Large part and delicate remain'd, thus spake

Ulysses—Herald! bear it to the bard
For his regale, whom I will soon embrace

In spite of sorrow; for respect is due
And veneration to the sacred bard

From all mankind, for that the muse inspires
Herself his song, and loves the tuneful tribe.
He ended, and the herald bore his charge
To the old Hero, who with joy received
That meed of honour at the bearer's hand.
Then, all, at once, assailed the ready feast,
And when nor hunger more nor thirst they felt,
Thus to Demodocus Ulysses spake.

Demodocus! I give thee praise above
All mortal men; since either thee the Muse
Jove's tuneful daughter, or the son of Jove
Apollo prompts; for, of Achaia's host,
Their glorious deeds and arduous toils, thou sing'st
As thou hadst present been thyself, or learnt
From others present there, the mournful tale.*
Come, then, proceed; that rare invention sing,

* Maximus Tyrius in his sixteenth Dissertations, not far from the beginning of it, speaks thus—Having fallen on the mention of Homer, and being unqualified myself to praise him worthily, I will entreat him to accommodate me with an expression of his own, that I may not seem to depreciate him by mine—

—‘'Εξοχι δ' τι βροτόν," ἃ Ὀμηρος, ε' αἰνίζομαι πάντων.—C.

The application however is not very happy, for it totally spoils the verse.

It is evident, Euflathius observes, that the poet here had an eye to himself, who seems indeed to have been inspired. With such scanty materials has he framed so beautiful a story, interweaving them with incidents so various and with such an air of truth, that knowing he was not present nor had conversed with others who were, we are ready to conclude that the Muse must have taught him all.—C.
The horse of wood, which by Minerva's aid
Epeus framed, and which Ulysses erst
Convey'd into the citadel of Troy
With warriors fill'd, who lay'd all Ilium waste.
Sing but this theme as sweetly, and, thenceforth,
I will proclaim thee in all ears, a bard
Of pow'r's divine, and by the Gods inspired.

He ended; then Apollo with full force
Rush'd on Demodocus, and he began
What time the Greeks, first firing their own camp, Steer'd all their galleys from the shore of Troy.
Already, in the horse conceal'd, his band
Around Ulysses sat; for Ilium's sons
Had drawn it to the citadel themselves,
And there the mischief stood. Then, strife arose
Among the Trojans compassing the horse,
And threefold was the doubt; whether to cleave
The hollow trunk asunder, or updrawn
Aloft, to cast it headlong from the rocks,
Or to permit the enormous image, kept
Entire, to stand an off'ring to the Gods,
Which was their defined course; for Fate had fix'd
Their ruin sure, when once they had received Within their walls that engine huge, in which Sat all the bravest Grecians with the fate
Of Ilium charged, and slaughter of her sons.
He sang, how, from the horse effused, the Greeks
Left their capacious ambush, and the town
Made desolate. To others, in his song,
He gave the praise of wasting all beside,
But told how, fierce as Mars, Ulysses join'd
With godlike Menelaus, in his house
Affail'd Deiphobus; him there engaged
In direst fight he sang, and through the aid
Of glorious Pallas, conqu'ror over all *

So sang the bard illustrious, at whose song
Ulysses melted, and tear following tear
Fell on his cheeks. As when a woman weeps,
Her husband fall'n in battle for her sake
And for his children' sake, before the gate
Of his own city; sinking to his side
She close infolds him with a last embrace,
And, gazing on him as he pants and dies,
Shrieks at the fight; mean-time, the ruthless foe
Smiting her shoulders with the spear, to toil
Command her and to bondage far away,
And her cheek fades with horror at the sound;
Ulysses, so, from his moist lids let fall
The frequent tear. Unnoticed by the rest

* Helen, after the death of Paris, is said to have been married to Deiphobus.—B. & C. The tradition affords at least a probable reason for the assault of his house in particular.
Those drops, but not by King Alcinoüs, fell,
Who, seated at his side, his heavy sighs
Remark'd, and the Phæacians thus bespake *.

Phæacian Chiefs and Senators attend!
Now bid the bard withhold his skilful hand,
Since not alike delightful to us all
Is this new theme, which hearing, (while ourselves
Have suppd and listen'd to the noble strain
Well-pleas'd) the stranger hath not ceas'd from tears
And lamentation, by remembrance caused
Of some great woe which wraps his soul around.
Bid, therefore, cease the bard, that all alike
Be gratified, the stranger and ourselves,
As is most seemly; for his conduct hence
To his own home, and these our lib'ral gifts
Prove that we prize him, as the soul that feels,
Though in the least degree, will ever prize
And as a brother love the suppliant-guest.
And thou conceal not, artfully reserv'd,
What I shall ask, far better plain declared
Than smother'd close; who art thou? speak thy name,
The name by which thy father, mother, friends

* The story of the Trojan horse is artfully introduced, that Ulysses weeping at the recital of it, and being questioned concerning the cause of his tears, an easy and natural introduction may be afforded to the narrative of his adventures.—C.
And fellow-citizens, with all who dwell
Around thy native city, in times past
Have known thee; for of all things human none
Lives altogether nameless, whether base
By birth, or noble, but each man receives
Ev'n in the moment of his birth, a name.
Thy country, people, city, tell; the mark
At which my ships, intelligent, shall aim,
That they may bear thee thither; for our ships
No pilot need or helm, as ships are wont,
But know, themselves, our purpose; know beside
All cities, and all fruitful regions well
Of all the earth, and, though in clouds involved,
Skim the rude billows, fearing neither wreck
Nor inj'ry, rage the tempest as it may.
Yet thus, long since, my father I have heard
Nausithoïs speaking; Neptune, he would say,
Is angry with us, for that safe we bear
Strangers of ev'ry nation to their home;
And he foretold a time when he would break
In pieces some Phæacian gallant bark
Returning after convoy of her charge,
And that, behind a mountain huge conceal'd

* The parents had by law not only a power to name their child, but also to give him a new name afterward, proclaiming it by the publick crier.—C.
Our city should, thenceforth, be found no more.
So spake my hoary Sire, which let the God
At his own pleasure do, or leave undone.
But tell me truth, and plainly. Where have been Thy wand’rings? in what regions of the earth
Haft thou arrived? what nations hast thou seen,
What cities? say, how many hast thou found
Harsh, savage and unjust? how many, kind
To strangers, and disposed to fear the Gods?
Say also, from what secret grief of heart
Thy sorrows flow, oft as thou hear’st the fate
Of the Achaians, or of Ilium sung?
That fate the Gods prepared; they spin the thread
Of man’s destruction, that in after days
The bard may make the sad event his theme.
Perish’d thy father or thy brother there?
Or haft thou at the siege of Ilium lost
Father-in-law, or son-in-law? for such Are next and dearest to us after those Who share our own descent; or was the dead
Thy bosom-friend, whose heart was as thy own?
For worthy as a brother of our love
The constant friend and the discreet I deem.
ARGUMENT
OF THE
NINTH BOOK.

Ulysses discovers himself to the Phaeacians, and begins the history of his adventures. He destroys Ithaca, city of the Ciconians; arrives among the Lotus-eaters; and afterwards at the land of the Cyclops. He is imprisoned by Polyphemus in his cave, who devours six of his companions; intoxicates the monster with wine, blinds him while he sleeps, and escapes from him.

BOOK IX.

Then answer, thus, Ulysses wise return'd.
Alcinoüs! o'er Phæacia's sons supreme!
Pleasant it is to listen while a bard
Like This, melodious as Apollo, sings.
The world, in my account, no sight affords
More gratifying, than a people blest
With cheerfulness and peace, a palace throng'd
With guests in order seated and regaled
With harp and song, while plenteous viands stream
On ev'ry table, and the cups, with wine
From brimming beakers fill'd, pass brisk around.
No lovelier sight know I *. But thou, it seems,
Thy thoughts haft turn'd to ask me whence my groans
And tears, that I may sorrow still the more †.
What first, what next, what last shall I rehearse,
On whom the Gods have show'r'd such various woes?
Learn first my name, that even in this land
Remote I may be known, and that, escaped

* Lucian ludicrously considers it as a demonstrative proof that the life of a parasite, or of one who subsists at another's table, is su-premely happy, that Homer, the wisest of poets, introduces the wise Ulysses admiring the spectacle here described as the pleasantest that the earth affords. But Plato is very angry with Homer on account of this sentiment, and, asking if this be a lesson of temperance fit for a youth to study, swears by Jupiter that in his opinion it is not. His indignation however seems rather unreasonable; since it is plainly a speech of complaisance merely, and designed to gratify Alcinoüs, the King of a voluptuous people. Thus Megaclides and Hermogenes considered it, and thus Euflathius; and, thus understood, it is a strong instance of the poet's attention to character, who so often extols the prudence of Ulysses.—C.
† So Sophocles in Oedipus Colon: ver. 501.

Δινὼ μὲν τὸ πάλαι κείμυον ὑπὸ κακὸν,
'Ω δείων' ἐπενίπειν—
O gueft! 'tis hard to wake a sleeping woe!

And so Plutarch in his Sympośiacs observes—We should be careful how we ask from others an account of their sufferings; for whether they have suffered by acts of injustice, or by the deaths of children, or by unsuccessful trading either by land or sea, the recital costs them pain.—C.
From all adversity, I may requite
Hereafter, this your hospitable care
At my own home, though distant far from yours.
I am Ulysses, fear'd in all the earth
For sublimest wisdom, and renown'd to heaven,
The offspring of Laertes; my abode
Is sun-burnt Ithaca; there stands, his boughs Waving, the mountain Neritus sublime,
And it is neighbour'd close by clust'ring isles
All populous; thence Samos is beheld, Dulichium, and Zaeynthus forest-clad.
Flat on the Deep she lies, farthest removed Toward the West, while, situate apart,
Her sister islands face the rising day;
Rugged she is, but fruitful nurse of sons
Magnanimous; nor shall these eyes behold, Elsewhere, an object dear and sweet as she.
Calypso, beauteous Goddess, in her grot
Detain'd me, wishing me her own espoused;
A€æan * Circe also, deeply skil'd
In sublimest arts, within her palace long
Detain'd me, wishing me her own espoused;
But never could they warp my constant mind.
So much our parents and our native soil
Attract us most, and even though our lot

* So called from Aia a city of Colchis.—B, & C.
Be fair and plenteous in a foreign land.
But come—my painful voyage, such as Jove
Gave me from Ilium, I will now relate.

From Troy to Thracian Ithinus I fail'd,
City of the Ciconians; them I slew,
And laid their city waste*; whence bringing forth
Much spoil with all their wives, I portion'd it
With equal hand, and each received a share.
Next, I exhorted to immediate flight
My people; but in vain; they madly scorn'd
My sober counsel, and much wine they drank,
And sheep and beeves flew num'rous on the shore.
Mean-time, Ciconians to Ciconians call'd,
Their neighbours summoning, a mightier host
And braver, dwelling distant from the shore,
And skilful, either mounted, to maintain
Fierce fight, or if occasion bade, on foot.
Num'rous they came as leaves, or vernal flow'rs
At day-spring. Then, by the decree of Jove, Misfortune found us. At the ships we fled Piercing each other with the brazen spear,
And till the morning brighten'd into noon,
Few as we were, we yet withflood them all;
But, when the sun verged westward, then the Greeks
Fell back, and the Ciconian host prevail'd.

* Because they had been allies of Priam.—B, & C.
Six warlike Greecians from each galley's crew Perish'd in that dread field; the rest escaped *

Thus, after loss of many, we pursued Our course, yet, difficult as was our flight, Went not till first we had invoked by name Our friends, whom the Ciconians had destroy'd +.

But, ether's Sov'reign, Jove, assail'd us soon With a tempestuous North-wind; earth alike And sea with storms he overhung, and night Fell fast from heav'n. Their heads deep-plunging oft Our gallies flew, and rent, and rent again Our tatter'd sail-cloth crackled in the wind. We, fearing instant death, within the barks Our canvas lodg'd, and, toiling strenuous, reach'd At length the continent. Two nights we lay Continual there, and two long days, consumed With toil and grief; but when the beauteous morn Had brought, at length, the third day to a close †,

* The whole number of the slain was 72, for it appears afterward that his barks were 12.—B.
† It was customary when any died in a foreign land, for the survivor, using certain ceremonies at the same time, to invoke them by name, that they might thus seem, even though their bodies were left behind, to have them still in their company.—B. & C.
‡ Ἀλλ' ἄτε ὅπι τὸν ἐκακοῦσας τόλμῃ ἡμεῖς, Or it may signify, on the morning of the third day, for τυλίω has a double sense, importing not only to finish but to make or bring to pass. As in that line—

Εἰ δύναμαι τελεσαι τι, καὶ εἰ τυλίσθης τι σι.
(Our masts erected, and white sails unfurl'd)
Again we sat on board; mean-time, the winds
Well managed by the steersman, urged us on.
And now, all danger past, I had attain'd
My native shore, but, doubling in my course
Malea, waves and currents and North-winds Constrain'd me devious to Cythera's isle *
Nine days by cruel storms I thence was borne Athwart the fishy Deep, but on the tenth Reach'd the Lotophagi, a race sustain'd
On sweetest fruit alone †. There quitting ship,
We landed and drew water, and the crews
Beside the vessels took their ev'ning cheer.
When, hafty, we had thus our strength renew'd,
I order'd forth my people to inquire (Two I selected from the rest, with whom I join'd an herald, third) what race of men
Might there inhabit. They, departing, mix'd
With the Lotophagi; nor hostile aught
Or savage the Lotophagi devis'd

* Malea was a promontory and Cythera an island of Laconia,—B. & C.
† Meninx is supposed to have been the land of the Lotophagi mentioned by Homer. Some indications of it are shown there, such as the altar built by Ulysses and the very fruit he found; for it abounds with a sort of tree which the inhabitants call the Lotus, the fruit of which has the most agreeable flavour. Strabo Geog: B. XVII.—It is also said that they made wine of it.—C.
Against our friends, but offer'd to their taste
The lotus; of which fruit what man fcor'er
Once tasted, no desire felt he to come
With tidings back, or seek his country more,
But rather wish'd to feed on lotus still
With the Lotophagi, and to renounce
All thoughts of home. Them, therefore, I constrain'd Weeping on board, and dragging each beneath
The benches, bound him there. Then, all in haste,
I urged my people to ascend again
Their hollow barks, left others also, fed
With fruit of lotus, should forget their home.
They quick embark'd, and on the benches ranged
In order, thence'd with oars the foamy flood.

Thence, o'er the Deep proceeding sad, we reach'd
The land at length, where, giant-sized * and free
From all constraint of law, the Cyclops dwell.
They, trusting to the Gods, plant not, or plough,
But earth unso'w'd, untill'd, brings forth for them
All fruits, wheat, barley, and the vinous grape
Large-cluster'd, nourish'd by the show'rs of Jove †.

* So the Scholium interprets in this place, the word ἔπιφαλεις.—
B. & C.

† They trusted, as Clarke observes, not in a religious sense, for it appears in the sequel that they accounted the Gods inferior to themselves, but in an economical one; depending in fact on their soil and climate, and leading a life of ease and inactivity.
No councils they convene, no laws contrive,
But caverns deep inhabit on the heads
Of lofty mountains, judging each, his own,
And heedless of the welfare of the rest.
In front of the Cyclopean haven lies
Nor close nor yet remote, an island, small
And cloth'd with woods. There, wild-goats, undisturb'd, Breed numberless; for never huntman there,
Inured to toil and hardship while he roams
The dreary woodland heights, their track pursues;
No fleecy flocks dwell there, nor plough is known,
But the unseeded and unfurrow'd fail,
Year after year a wilderness by man
Untrodden, food for blatant goats supplies.
For crimson galleys none the Cyclops own,
Nor naval artific, whose industrious hand
Might build them barks for intercourse by sea
With distant cities, as the practice is,
For mutual 'vantage' fake, of wiser man,
Else, man might people and improve their isle
Not fieril in itself, but apt to yield,
In their due season, fruits of ev'ry kind.
For f tịchh'd beside the hoary ocean lie
Green meadows moist, where vines would never fail;
Light is the land, and they might yearly reap
The tallest crops, so unctuous is the glebe.
Safe is its haven also, where no need
Of cable is or anchor, or to lash
The hawser fast ashore, but pushing in His bark, the mariner might there abide Till rising gales should tempt him forth again.
At bottom of the bay clear water runs,
Issuing from a cove hemmed all around
With poplars; down into that bay we steer'd
Amid the darkness of the night, some God
Conducting us; for all unseen it lay,
Such gloom involved the fleet, nor shone the moon
From heav'n to light us, veiled by pitchy clouds.
Hence, neither island, we, nor lofty surge
Rolling toward the beach descried, or cre
Our vessels struck the ground; but when they struck,
Then, low'ring all our sails, we disembark'd,
And on the sea-beach slept till dawn appear'd.
Soon as Aurora, daughter of the dawn,
Look'd rosy forth, we with admiring eyes
The isle surveying, roam'd it wide around.
Meantime, the nymphs, Jove's daughters, roused the goats
Bred on the mountains, to supply with food
The partners of my toils; then, bringing forth
Bows and long-pointed javelins from the ships,
Divided all into three sep' rate bands
We struck them, and the Gods requited soon
Our skill, so frequent on all sides they fell.
Twelve ships attended me, and ev'ry ship
Nine goats received by lot; myself alone
Selected ten. All day, till set of sun,
We, feasting largely, fat, and drinking wine
Delicious, without stint; for dearth was none
Of ruddy wine on board, but much remain'd,
For much we found at Ithmarus, where each
His vessel fill'd, when we despoil'd the town.
Thence looking to the near Cyclopean shore
We saw smoke rising, and a mingled din
Of sheep and goats and of their owners heard.
Now sank the sun, and (night o'ershadowing all)
We slept along the shore; but when again
The rosy-finger'd daughter of the dawn
Look'd forth, my crews conven'd, I thus began.

My friends! rest here, while, seeking yonder coast
With my own bark and people, I inquire
If the inhabitants be wild, unjust,
And to contention giv'n, or well disposed
To strangers, and a race who fear the Gods.

So saying, I climb'd my bark and bade my crew Casting her hawsers loose, attend me thence.
Obedient they soon enter'd, and with oars
Well-timed and even thresh'd the foamy flood.
Ere long, arriving on the coast, we found
At its extremity, fast by the sea,
A cavern, lofty, and dark-brow'd above With laurels; in that cavern flumb'ring lay Much cattle, sheep and goats, and a broad court Enclosed it, fenced with tiones from quarries hewn, With spiry firs, and oaks of ample bough.
Here dwelt a giant vast, who far remote
His flocks fed solitary, converse none Desiring, fullen, savage, and unjust.
Monster, in truth, he was, hideous in form, Far less resembling man by bread sustain'd, Than some huge mountain-summit, tufted thick With trees and shrubs, and tow'ring o'er the rest. Enjoining, then, my people to abide Fast by the ship which they should closely guard, I went; but not without a goat-skin fill'd With richest wine, from Maron erst received, The offspring of Evanthes, and the priest Of Phoebus, whom in Iliarus I saved, And, with himself, his children and his wife, Through rev'rence of Apollo; for he dwelt Amid the laurels sacred to his God. He gave me, therefore, noble gifts; from him Sev'n talents I receiv'd of beaten gold, A beaker, argent all, and after these No fewer than twelve jars with wine replete,
Rich, unadult'rate, drink for Gods; nor knew
One servant, male or female, of that wine
In all his house; none knew it, save himself,
His wife, and the intendant of his stores.
Oft as they drank that luscious juice, he flaked
A single cup with twenty from the stream,
And, even then, the beaker breath'd abroad
A scent celestial, which whoever finelt,
Thenceforth no pleasure found it to abstain.
Charged with an ample goat-kin of this wine
I went, and with provision in a bag,
But felt a sudden presage in my soul
That, haply, with terrifick force endued,
Some savage would appear, untaught the laws
That guard the social rites of human-kind.
We fearles enter'd his abode, but Him
Found not, then pasturing his flocks abroad.
With curious eyes his cavern we explored
From side to side; his strainers hung with cheese
Distended, and with lambs and kids his pens
Were crowded close, all sorted by their age
In sep'rate folds; the fullest-sized apart,
Apart from these the smaller, and the least
Also apart. His pails and bowls with whey
Swam all, neat vessels into which he milk'd.
Me then my friends first importuned to take

VOL. III.   A portion
A portion of his cheeses, then to drive
Forth from the sheep-cotes to the rapid bark
His kids and lambs, and plough the brine again.
But me they moved not, happier had they moved!
I wish'd to see him, and to gain, perchance,
Some pledge of hospitality from One,
No pleasant host, when he should once appear.
Then, kindling fire, we offer'd to the Gods,
And of his cheeses eating, patient fat
Till home he trudg'd from pasture*. Charged he came With dry wood bundled, an enormous load,
Fuel by which to sup. Loud crash'd the thorns
Which down he cast before the cavern's mouth,
To whose interior nooks we trembling flew.
At once he drove into his spacious cave
His batten'd flock, all those which gave him milk,
But left the males, both rams and goats, abroad,
And with a rock (uplifting it with ease)
Shut close his cavern's mouth. It was a load
Which all the teams of twenty and two wains
Of amplest size, had toil'd in vain to move.
Such was the crag that served him as a door

* Athenæus takes particular notice of it as an instance of the piety of Homer, that he represents Ulysses as scrupulously attentive to this religious duty, even in the cave of the Cyclops.—C. But the pious aft had certainly this defect in it, that he offered what was not his own; a defect which Barnes has noticed.
For his capacious cave. Then, down he fat,
And milking, one by one, his goats and ewes,
Applied her yearling to the teats of each,
And thick'ning half with rennet, thrust the curd
Into his wicker sieves, but stored the rest
In pans and bowls—his customary drink.
His labours thus perform'd, he kindled, last,
His fuel, and discerning us, enquired,
Friends, speak your names, and answer, whence ye come?
Plough ye the Deep for traffic, or, at large,
As pirates, rove, who, fearing nought themselves,
Alarm and terror bear to foreign shores?
He ceas'd. We, struck with horror, heard the growl
Of his big voice, and view'd his form uncouth,
To whom, though sore-appall'd, I thus replied.

Of Greece are we, and, bound from Ilium home,
Have wander'd wide the expanse of ocean, sport
For every wind, and, driven from our course, (Such was the will of Jove) have landed here.
We boast ourselves of Agamemnon's train,
The son of Atreus, at this hour the Chief
Beyond all others under heav'n renown'd,
So great a city he hath sack'd, and slain
Such numerous foes; but since we reach, at last,
Thy knees, we beg such hospitable fare,
Or other gift, as guests are wont to obtain.
Illustrious lord I respect the Gods, and us
Thy suitors; suppliants are the care of Jove
The hospitable; he their wrongs resents,
And where the stranger sojourns, there is he.

I ceas'd, when answer thus he, fierce, return'd.
Friend! either thou art fool, or hast arrived
Indeed from far, who bidd'lt me fear the Gods
Left they be wroth. The Cyclops little heeds Jove ægis-arm'd, or all the Powers of heav'n.
Our race is mightier far; nor shall I spare,
Through fear of Jove's hostility, thyself
Or thy companions, be not such my choice.
But tell me now. Where touch'd thy gallant bark
Our country, on thy first arrival here?
Remote, or nigh? for I would learn the truth.

So spake he, tempting me; but, artful, thus
I answer'd, penetrating his intent.

My vessel, Neptune, Shaker of the shores,
At yonder utmost promontory dash'd
In pieces, hurling her against the rocks
With winds that blew right thither from the sea.

* So the Cyclops of Euripides says,

Zνδς ο' ἐγὼ κηραυνὸν ὑμῖν ἔδεικνυ, ἔπει,
Οὐδ' ὀφθαλμὸν ἐντὸς ἐξίσωσιν θεὸς.—C.

I quake not at the thunderbolt of Jove
O guest, nor know him more a God than I.
And I, with these alone, escaped alive.

So I, to whom, relentless, answer none
He deign'd, but, with his arms extended, sprang
Toward my people, of whom two at once
Seizing, like whelps against his cavern-floor
He dash'd them, and their brains spread all around.

These, piece-meal hewn, for supper he prepared,
And, like a mountain-lion, neither flesh
Nor entrails left, nor yet their marrowy bones.
We, viewing that tremendous fight, upraised
Our hands to Jove, all hope and courage lost.

When thus the Cyclops had with human flesh
Fill'd his capacious belly, and had quaff'd
Much undiluted milk, among his flocks
Outstretch'd immense, he press'd his cavern-floor.
Me, then, my courage prompted to approach
The monster with my glitt'ring faulchion drawn,
And to transfix him where the vitals wrap
The liver; but maturer thoughts forbade.
For so, we also had incurd a death
Tremendous, wanting pow'r to thrust aside
The rocky mass that closed his cavern-mouth
By force of hand alone. Thus many a sigh
Heaving, we watch'd the dawn. But when, at length, Aurora, day-spring's daughter rosy-palm'd
Look'd forth, then, kindling fire, his flocks he milk'd

R 3

In
In order, and her yeanling kid or lamb
Thrust under each. When thus he had perform'd
His wonted task, two seizing, as before,
He flew them for his next obscene regale.
His breakfast ended, from the cave he drove His fatted flocks abroad, moving with ease
That pond'rous barrier, and replacing it
As he had only closed a quiver's lid.
Then, hissing them along, he drove his flocks Toward the mountain, and me left, the while Contemplating how best I might avenge
My friends, and by the aid of Pallas win Deathless renown. This counsel pleas'd me most.
Beside the sheep-cote lay a maffy club
Hewn by the Cyclops from an olive flock,
Green, but which dried, should serve him for a staff.
To us considering it, that staff appear'd
Tall as the mast of a huge trading bark,
Impell'd by twenty rowers o'er the Deep.
Such, in our eyes, its length and bulk appear'd.
From this I fever'd, at its tap'ring end,
A fathom's length, and bade my people shave
The scantling smooth. They smooth'd it, and, the while,
I gave it point, then seer'd it in the fire,
And cover'd it with ordure of the flocks
With which the cavern-floor lay thick bespread.

And
And now, commandment for the lots I gave,
Who should, with me, the pointed brand enforce
When sleep should seize him next, into his eye,
And grind the pupil out. They shook the lots,
And four were chosen, in my own esteem
The worthiest, and myself was chosen fifth *.
At even-tide he came, his fleecy flocks
Assembling homeward, and compell'd them all
Into his cavern, leaving none abroad,
Either through some farmise, or so inclined
By influence, haply, of the Gods themselves.
The huge rock pull'd into its place again

* It was necessary to choose them by lot, lest those whom he left, had he chosen his assistants otherwise, should have thought themselves undervalued, or those whom he had taken, have complained of being selected for a service of so much danger.
Spondanusus, as both Barnes and Clarke observe, has much foolish speculation here, on the question why Ulysses did not kill the Cy-clops at once, Is he satisfied, says he, with such slight revenge for the loss of his six companions? I deny that it was slight. To blind him was a severer punishment than to slay him. By deprivation of fight his life is made more bitter to him than a thousand deaths.
And I am not afraid to affirm that this was the very consideration which determined Ulysses to act as he did, though the poet has not mentioned it. The learned critic, says Clarke, was wonderfully blind himself, for the true reason of the hero's conduct could not have been more plainly given than it is in that line,

\[ \text{At} /\text{yap} \mathfrak{n} \\ \text{ccl} \mathfrak{oi} \mathfrak{y} \\ \text{q} \mathfrak{i} \mathfrak{m} \mathfrak{c} \mathfrak{e} \mathfrak{s} \text{ap} \text{ap} \text{w} \text{th}, \text{&c.} \]

The mouth of the cave being closed with a rock which they could not move, they must infallibly have perished, had not Ulysses spared the life of Polyphemus that he might displace it for them.
At the cave's mouth, he, sitting, milk'd his sheep
And goats in order, and her kid or lamb
Thrust under each; thus, all his work dispatch'd,
Two more he seiz'd, and to his supper fell.
I then, presenting to his hand a bowl
Of ivy-wood replete with ruddy wine,
Before the Cyclops stood, and thus began.

Lo, Cyclops! this is wine*. Take this and drink
After thy meal of man's flesh. Taste and learn What precious liquor our lost vessel bore.
I brought it for libation, and in hope
That, moved to pity by that sacred rite,
Thou would'st dismiss us home; but limits none
Thy fury knows; what man of all mankind
Shall, after deeds thus lawless, visit Thee?

I ceas'd. He took and drank, and hugely† pleas'd
With that delicious bev'rage, thus enquired.
Give me again, and spare not. Tell me, too, Thy name, incontinent, that I may make Requital, gratifying also thee

* Hierocles being brought before the judge, he sentenced him to be beaten with rods, when filling the hollow of his hand with the blood that streamed from him, he scattered it over the magistrate, saying

Κύκλωψ, τῇ πίει ὀίνῳ, ἵπτει φάγεις ἀνεξίματι κρέα.

Vide Suidam in voce Hierocles.—B. & C.

† Αἰβως.

With
With somewhat to thy taste. We Cyclops own
A bounteous foil, which yields us also wine
From clusters nourish'd by the show'rs of Jove;
But this—oh this is from above—a stream
Of nectar and ambrosia, all divine!

He ended, and received a second draught,
Like measure. Thrice I bore it to his hand,
And, foolish, thrice he drank. But when the fumes
Began to play around the Cyclops' brain,
With show of amity I thus replied.

Cyclops! thou hast my noble name enquired,
Which I will tell thee. Give me, in return,
The promised boon, some hospitable pledge.
My name is Outis*; Outis I am call'd
At home, abroad, wherever I am known.

So

Clarke, who has preserved this name in his marginal version, contends strenuously, and with great reason, that Outis ought not to be translated; and in a passage which he quotes from the Ada eruditorum, we see much fault found with Giphanius and other interpreters of Homer for having translated it. It is certain that in Homer the word is declined not as οὔτις-τῶν, which signifies no man, but as οὔτις-τοις, making τοῖς in the accusative, consequently as a proper name. It is sufficient that the ambiguity was such as to deceive the friends of the Cyclops. Outis is said by some (perhaps absurdly) to have been a name given to Ulysses on account of his having larger ears than common.

The Gentleman who honoured this work with some very learned and acute criticisms in the Analytical Review for January 1793, and to whose remarks the Translator with pleasure acknowledges himself indebted for several improvements, is still of opinion against Clarke
So I; to whom he, savage, thus replied.
Outis, when I have eaten all his friends,
Shall be my last regale*. Be that thy boon.

Clarke and the writer quoted by Clarke from the Aeschinides, that Outis ought to be translated. But in all that he alleges to that purpose there seems to be no sufficient reason for it.

Outis, though a name of expedience only, and invented merely for the sake of its consequences, is as much a name as that which really belonged to the inventor; and names are never translated.
No, not even when our clear apprehension of a passage, depends on our knowledge of their meaning. And for this plain reason.

Because a name translated is a new name, and not that which the person bore or chose to assume. In all such cases, therefore, the reader's possible ignorance is overlooked in the text, and such information as he may want is given him in the margin.

Thus, in the first book of Samuel, where Abigail speaking of her husband says, Nabal is his name and folly is with him, it is sufficient that in the margin the translators of the Bible inform us that Nabal signifies fool. And again, when the mother of Ruth says, call me no longer Naomi, but call me Mara, for the Lord hath dealt very bitterly with me, the reader unskilled in Hebrew, is enlightened by a marginal reference, which teaches him that Naomi signifies pleasant, and Mara bitter.

Other proofs might be given, and one in particular from the 19th book of this very Poem, where the reason why Autolycus named the hero of it Ulysses, or rather Odysseus, is asigned, and where it would nevertheless be wrong, and even preposterous, to convey to the English reader the information he needs, by a translation of the name in the context.

* Homer seems to have been the inventor of the terrible Graces, one of which is that speech of the Cyclops—*Outis.ev w wpiavov follow—I will eat Outis lait. Such was the favour shown by the monster to Ulysses. Nor does he appear so dreadful while he devours two Greeks, nor from the rock with which he closes up his cavern, nor from his club, as in this instance of savage urbanity.
Demetrius Phalerus περί ῆπιανίας;—C.
He spake, and, downward sway'd, fell refulpine,
With his huge neck aslant. All-conqu'ring sleep
Soon seized him. From his gullet gush'd the wine
With human morfels mingled, many a blast
Sonorous issuing from his glutted maw.
Then, thrusting far the spike of olive-wood
Into the embers glowing on the hearth,
I heated it, and cheer'd my friends, the while,
Left any should, through fear, decline his part.
But when that stake of olive-wood, though green,
Should soon have flamed, for it was glowing hot,
I bore it to his side. Then all my aids
Around me gathered, and the Gods infused Heroic fortitude into our hearts.
They, grasping the sharp stake of olive-wood
Infixed it in his eye; myself, advanced
To a superiour stand, twirld it about.
As when a shipwright with his wimble bores
Tough oaken timber, placed on either side
Below, his fellow-artists strain the thong
Alternate, and the restless iron spins,
So, grasping hard the fiery-pointed stake,
We twirld it in his eye; the bubbling blood
Boil'd round about the brand; his pupil sent
A scalding vapour forth that singed his brow,

And
And all his eye-roots crackled in the flame.
As when the smith an hatchet or large axe
Temp'ring, immerses all the hissing blade
Deep in cold water, (whence the strength of steel)
So his'd his eye around the olive-wood.
The howling monster with his outcry fill'd
The hollow rock, and I, with all my aids, Fled terrified. He, plucking forth the spike
From his burnt socket, mad with anguish, cast
The implement all bloody far away.
Then, bellowing, he founded forth the name
Of ev'ry Cyclops dwelling in the caves
Around him, on the wind- swept mountain-tops;
They, flocking at his cry from ev'ry part,
Circled his den, and of his ail inquired.

What ail'st thou, Polyphemus, with hideous cries
Troubling the peaceful night, and our repose?
Fear'st thou to perish, or to lose thy flocks
By force or fraud of rovers o'er the Deep?

Whom thus the Cyclops answer'd from within.
My friends! By fraud of Outis here surpris'd,
By force of Outis here subdued, I die.

Then thus with accents wing'd his friends without,
If no man harm thee, but thou art alone,
And sickness feel'st, it is the stroke of Jove,
And thou must bear it; yet invoke for aid
Thy father Neptune, Sov’reign of the floods *
So saying, they went, and in my heart I laugh’d
That by the fiction only of a name,
Slight stratagem! I had deceived them all.
Then groan’d the Cyclops wrung with pain and grief,
And, fumbling with stretch’d hands, removed the rock
From his cave’s mouth; which done, he fat him down
Spreading his arms athwart the pass, to stop
Our egress with his flocks abroad; to dull,
It seems, he held me, and so ill-advise’d.
I, pondering what means might fittest prove To save from instant death, (if save I might)
My people and myself, to ev’ry shift
Inclined, and various counsels framed, as one
Who strove for life, with instant death in view.
To me, thus meditating, this appear’d
The likeliest course. The rams well-thriven were,
Thick-fleece’d, full-sized, with wool of fable hue.
These, silently, with other twigs on which The Cyclops, hideous monster, slept, I bound,
Three in one leath; the intermediate rams Bore each a man, whom the exterior two

* Outis, as a name, could only denote him who bore it; but as a noun, it signifies no man, which accounts sufficiently for the ludicrous mistake of his brethren.
Preserved, concealing him on either side.
Thus each was borne by three, and I, at last,
The curl’d back seizing of a ram, (for one
I had reserv’d far stateliest of them all)
Slipp’d underneath his belly, and both hands
Infolding fast in his exub’rant fleece,
Hung by that hold and press’d the floor supine *.
All thus disposed, we watch’d with many a sigh
The sacred dawn; but when, at length, aris’n,
Aurora, day-spring’s daughter rosy-palm’d
Again appear’d, the males of all his flocks
Rush’d forth to pasture, and his ewes, the while,
Stood bleating, unrelieved from the distress
Of udders overcharged. He, rack’d with pain Intolerable, handled, as they stood,
The backs of all, but, in his folly, left
Their bosoms, where we clung, still unexplored.
And now (none left beside) the ram approach’d
With his own wool encumber’d and with me,
Whom many a fear molested. Polypheme
The giant stroked him as he sat, and said,

* Here again Spondanus makes a discovery. Namely, that Ulysses reserv’d the ram to himself, which was the largest of the whole flock, discovered by doing so, more solicitude for his own safety than for that of his companions. As if it was not plainly impossible that he should bind himself as he had bound them.—C.
In fact he was much less secure than they, having no ram on either side to conceal him.
My darling ram! why, last of the flock
Com'st thou, whom never, heretofore, my sheep
Could leave behind, but stalking at their head,
Thou first wilt wont to crop the tender grass,
First to arrive at the clear stream, and first
With ready will to seek my sheep-cote here
At evening; but thou com'st, now, last of all.
Is sorrow for thy master's eye the cause
Pierced by the leader of a worthless crew
Vile as himself, who vanquish'd me with wine,
The vagrant Outis? Him I still believe Imprison'd here, and could'st thou but assist Thy master's search, and tell me with a voice
Articulate in what recess conceal'd
He 'scapes my fury now, from side to side
His scatter'd brain should spread my cavern-floor,
And lighter I should feel my wrong received
From Outis, basely named and nothing worth *.

So saying, he left him to pursue the flock.
When, thus drawn forth, we had, at length, escaped

* Polyphemum Homerus cum immanem ferumque sinxit, cum ariete etiam colloquentem facit, ejusque laudare fortunas, quod, quae vellet, ingredi posset; et, quae vellet, attingere.—Cic. Tufc. Disp. Lib. V.—C.

Homer, having represented Polyphemus as a fierce and savage Being, makes him also hold discourse with his ram, which he accounts a happy creature, because he can go where he will, and find what his occasions require.
Few paces from the cavern and the court,
Myself releasing first, my friends I loos’d.
Then, turning seaward many a thriven ewe
Sharp-hoof’d, we drove them swiftly to the ship.
With joyful hearts my people us received
Who had escaped, but much they mourn’d the dead.
I suffer’d not their tears, but silent shook
My brows, by signs commanding them to lift
The sheep on board, and instant plow the main.
They, quick embarking, on the benches fat
Well-ranged, and threaten’d with oars the foamy flood;
But when my distance from the shore was such As a loud voice may fly, with bitter taunts
Insulting then the Cyclops, I exclaim’d.

Cyclops! when thou devoured’st in thy cave
With brutal force my followers, thou devour’d’st
The followers of no timid Chief, or base.
Vengeance was sure to recompense that deed
Atrocious. Monster! who waft not afraid
To eat the stranger hous’d beneath thy roof!
Therefore the Gods have well requited thee.

I ended; he, exasperate, raged the more,
And rending from its hold a mountain-top,
Hurl’d it toward us; at our vessel’s stern
Down came the mass, nigh sweeping in its fall
The rudder’s head. The ocean at the plunge
Of that huge rock, high on its refluent flood
Heav’d, irresistible, the ship to land.
I seizing, quick, our longest pole on board,
Back thrust her from the coast, and by a nod
In silence given, enjoin’d my crew to ply
Their oars in haste, that so we might escape.
Procumbent *, each obey’d, and when the bark
Had twice her former distance interposed †,
Again I greeted him, although my friends
Earnest diffuaded me on ev’ry side.

Ah, rash Ulysses! why with taunts provoke
The savage more, who hath this moment hurl’d
A weapon, such as heav’d the ship again
To land, where death seem’d certain to us all?
For had he heard a cry, or but the voice
Of one man speaking, he had all our heads
With some sharp rock, and all our timbers crush’d
Together, such vast force is in his arm.

So they, but my courageous heart remain’d
Unmoved, and thus again, incensed, I spake.

Cyclops! should any man hereafter ask

* προκοπεῖντες.

― Olli certamine summo Procumbunt. ViRGIli.

† The seeming incongruity of this line with 555, is reconciled by supposing that Ulysses exerted his voice, naturally loud, in an extraordinary manner on this second occasion.—C.
Who caused thy shameful blindness, thus reply—
Laertes' son of Ithaca, renown'd
For cities sackt, Ulysses claims the praise.
I cease'd, and with a groan thus he replied.
Ah me! an antient oracle I feel Accomplish'd. Here abode a prophet erst,
A man of noblest form, and in his art
Unrivall'd, Telemus Eurymedes.
He, prophesying to the Cyclops-race,
Grew old among us, and prefaged my loss
Of fight, in future, by Ulysses' hand.
I therefore watch'd for the arrival here,
Always, of some great Chief, for stature, bulk
And beauty prais'd, and cloth'd with wond'rous might.
But now, a puny dwarf, a wretch beneath
All prudent fear, subdued me first with wine,
Then blinded me. Come hither, O my guest!
Return, Ulysses! hospitable cheer
Awaits thee, and my pray'rs I will prefer
To glorious Neptune for thy prosp'rous course;
For I am Neptune's offspring, and the God
Is proud to be my Sire; he, if he please,
And he alone can heal me; none beside
Of Pow'rs Immortal, or of men below.
He spake, to whom I answer thus return'd.
I would that of thy life amerced as sure

I could
I could dismiss thee to the shades, as none—
Not Neptune's self shall fight restore to Thee.

So I; then pray'd the Cyclops to his Sire,
With hands uprais'd toward the starry heav'n.

Hear, Ocean's Sov'reign! Neptune azure-hair'd!
If I indeed am thine, and if thou boast
Thyself my father, grant that never more
Laertes' son of Ithaca, renown'd
For cities sackt, Ulysses, reach his home.
But should the fates ordain that he behold
Once more his home, his country and his friends,
Late, in distress, on board a foreign bark,
All his companions lost, may he arrive,
Nor find his mis'ries ended even there.

He spake, whose imprecation Neptune heard.
Then lifting from the shore a stone of size
Still more unwieldy, with enormous force
He whirl'd it round, and launch'd it from his hand.
Behind my fable bark the burthen fell,
Threat'ning the rudder's head. Huge rose the waves
Under concussion of the plunging rock,
And wellnigh wafted us at once to land.

But when we reached the isle where we had left
Our num'rous barks, and where my people sat
Watching with ceaseless sorrow our return,
We thrust our vessel to the sandy shore, s 2

Then
Then disembark'd, and of the Cyclops' sheep
Gave equal share to all. To me alone
My fellow-voyagers the ram consign'd
In distribution, my peculiar meed.
Him to the cloud-girt Sov'reign over all
Devoting, on the shore his thighs I burn'd.
But adverse Jove, designing, even then,
The wreck of all my galleys, and the death
Of all my followers, heeded not the gift.
Thus, feasting largely, on the shore we sat
Till even-tide, and quaffing gen'rous wine;
But when the sun was set and darkness fell,
Then, on the shore we slept; and when again
Aurora, rosy daughter of the Dawn,
Look'd forth, I bade my people, casting loose
Without delay their moorings, climb the barks.
They, all obedient, took their seats on board
Well-ranged, and thresh'd with oars the foamy flood.
Thus, happy to escape, though sad for those Whom we had lost, we roam'd the Deep again.
ARGUMENT
OF THE
TENTH BOOK.

Ulysses, in pursuit of his narrative, relates his arrival at the island of Æolus, his departure thence, and the unhappy occasion of his return thither. The monarch of the winds dismisses him at last with much asperity. He next tells of his arrival among the Laestrygonians, by whom his whole fleet, together with their crews, are destroyed, his own ship and crew excepted. Thence he is driven to the island of Circe. By her the half of his people are transformed into swine. Assisted by Mercury, he resists her enchantments himself, and prevails with the Goddesses to recover them to their former shape. In consequence of Circe’s instructions, after having spent a complete year in her palace, he prepares for a voyage to the infernal regions.

BOOK X.

We came to the Æolian isle; there dwells Æolus, son of Hippotas, belov’d
By the Immortals, in an isle afloat.

* The Æolian isles, commonly so called, were in the Tyrrhene sea, and not far from Sicily. But whether one of those is here intended, or a distinct one, perhaps of the poet’s creation, is doubted by the commentators.

Heraclides Ponticus supposes Æolus himself an allegorical person, representing the year, and his six sons and six daughters the twelve months of it.—B. & C.
A brazen wall force-proof, and smoothest rocks
Of steep ascent, environ it around.

Twelve are his children in his palace born,
Six sons, six daughters; and his daughters fix
To his six sons by nuptial rites he join'd.

They with their father hold perpetual feast
And with their royal mother, still supplied
With dainties numberless; the sounding dome
Is fill'd with fav'ry odours all the day,

And with their comforts chaste at night they sleep
On stateliest couches with rich arras spread.

Their city and their splendid courts we reach'd.

A month complete he, friendly, at his board
Regaled me, and inquiry made minute
Of Ilium's fall, of the Achaian fleet,

And of our voyage thence. I told him all.

But now, desirous to embark again,
I ask'd dismission home, which he approved,
And well provided for my prosp'rous course.

He gave me, furnish'd by a bullock slay'd
In his ninth year, a bag; ev'ry rude blast
Which from its bottom turns the Deep, that bag
Imprison'd held; for him Saturnian Jove

Hath officed arbiter of all the winds,
To rouse their force, or calm them, at his will.

He gave me them on board my bark, so bound

With
With silver twine that not a breath escaped,
Then order'd gentle Zephyrus abroad
To speed us homeward. Order vain, alas!
So fatal proved the folly of my friends*.

Nine days continual, night and day we fail'd,
And on the tenth my native land appear'd.
Not far remote my Ithacans I saw
Fires kindling on the coast†; but worn with toil
And watchful care me gentle sleep subdued;
For constant I had ruled the helm, nor giv'n
That charge to any, fearful of delay.
Then, in close conference my crew bespake
Each other, and he carries home, they said,
Silver and gold from Æolus received,
Son of the valiant Hippotas; and thus
A seaman murmuring, the rest harangued.

Ye Gods! what city or what lands foe'er
Ulysses visits, how is he belov'd
By all, and honour'd! many precious spoils
He homeward bears from Troy; but we return,

* The poet is supposed to have bound these bags with silver twine, that the mistake of the mariners who imagined them filled with treasure, might seem more probable.—B. & C.
† They kindled fires on the coast for the information of navigators, the fire itself serving them as a signal by night, and the smoke by day. This was the smoke which Ulysses while detained by Calypso, so ardently wished to see.—C.
Partners of all his perils by the way,
With thriftefs hands. Now also he hath gain'd
This pledge of friendship from the King of winds.
But come—be quick—search we the bag, and learn What titles of gold and silver it contains.

So he, whose mischievous advice prevailed.
They loos'd the bag; forth issued all the winds,
And, rapt by tempefts back, with fruitlefs tears
They mourn'd their native country lost again.
Just then awaking, in my troubled mind
I doubted, whether from the veiTel's fide
To plunge and perish, or, with patient mind,
To suffer and to live. The suff'rer's part
At length I chose, and, resolute, survived.

But, with my mantle wrapt around my brows,
I lay'd me down, till, hurried by the blast,
We, groaning, reach'd again th' Aëolian ifle.

First, from refrefhing streams our barks we ftored,
Then, my companions at their galley's fides
All feated, took repaft; short meal we made,
When, with an herald and a chofen friend,
The hall of Aëolus once more I fought.
Him banquetting with all his sons we found,
And with his confort. Ent'ring, down we sat
All on the threshold, whom aftonifh'd they Beheld, and of our coming thus enquired.

Return'd?
Return'd? Ulysses! by what adverse Pow'r
Repuls'd hast thou arrived? we sent thee forth
Well-fitted to regain thy native isle,
Or soon to reach what port so'er thou would'st.

So they—to whom, heart-broken, I replied.
My base companions and the traitor, Sleep
Alike are culpable; but, Oh my friends!
Redress the mischief, for the pow'r is yours.

So I their favour woo'd. Mute sat the fons,
But thus their father answer'd. Hence—be gone—
Thou worst of men! I may not entertain
Or give safe conduct homeward to a wretch
Abhorr'd by all in heav'n. Hastie—leave the isle,
For hated by the Gods hast thou arrived.

He said, and sent me sorrowing from the gate.
Thence, therefore, wearied at the toilsome oar
Through our own folly, and with mournful hearts
We plough'd the Deep, no longer hoping aid
From Æolus, of winds to waft us home.
Six days we navigated, day and night,
The briny flood, and on the seventh arrived
At lofty Læstirigonia, city built
By Lamus, for its distant gates renown'd *

* The distant gates are mentioned as a datum from which to estimate the extent of the city.—B. & C.
The herdsman, there, his cattle driving home,
Calls forth the shepherd; there, th' industrious swain, Renouncing sleep, may double wages earn
Attending both; for when the flocks forfake
At even-tide the pastures which they range
Throughout the fervid day, the cooler hours
Nocturnal to the grazing herds belong*.
To that capacious port we came, by rocks
Uninterrupted flank'd on either side
Of tow'ring height, while prominent the shores
And bold, converging at the haven's mouth Leave narrow pass†. We push'd our galleys in,
Then moor'd them side by side; for never surge
There lifts its head, or great or small, but clear
We found, and motionless, the shelter'd flood.
I only, stationing my bark without,
Secured her well with hawfers to a rock
At the land's point, then climb'd the rugged steep,
And stood to spy the country. Labours none
Of men or oxen in the land appear'd,

* It is supposed by Eustathius that the pastures being infested by gad-flies and other noxious insects in the day-time, they drove their sheep a-field in the morning, which by their wool were defended from them, and their cattle in the evening, when the insects had withdrawn —B. & C. It is one of the few passages in Homer that must lie at the mercy of conjecture.

† Which accounts for the destruction of the fleet, the difficulty of the egress rendering their escape impracticable.—C.
Nor aught beside saw we, but from the earth
Smoke rising; therefore of my friends I sent
Two well-selected, with an herald, third,
To learn what race of men that country fed.
Departing, they an even track pursuéd
Made by the waggons bringing timber down
From the high mountains to the town below.
Ere yet they reach'd the city, on the way
A damsel met them bearing forth an ew'\r, The daughter of Antiphas, the King, Descending to the chryftal fountain named
Artacia, whence the city was supplied.
Approaching they accosted her, and ask'd
What King reign'd there, and over whom he reign'd.
She, prompt and pleased, soon taught them how to find,
Her father's house, where entering, they beheld,
And shudder'd at the sight, a woman, huge
And hideous, like a mountain's tow'ring head.
She, seeing them, from council, instant, call'd
Her spouse Antiphas, who teeming came With dreadful purposes, and of the Three Seized one, whom crush'd and broken he devour'd.
With headlong terror the surviving two Fled to the ships. Then sent the ruthless King
Loud proclamation forth, and, at the sound,
From side to side of all the city, fierce
And
And countless, stalk'd the Læstrigonian host,
Gigantic forms, not human. From the rocks
Huge figures, a strong man's burden each, they cast,
And terrible, at once, a mingled sound
Of shattered ships and dying men arose,
Whom spear'd like fishes to their home they bore,
A loathsome prey. While them within the port
They slaughter'd, I, (the faulchion at my side Drawn forth) cut loose the hawlers of my ship,
And all my crew enjoin'd with bosoms laid
Prone on their oars, to fly the threaten'd woe.
They, dreading instant death, tugg'd resupine
Together, and my galley from beneath
Those beetling * rocks into the open sea
Shot gladly; but the rest all perish'd there.

Proceeding thence, we sigh'd, and roam'd the waves,
Glad that we lived, but sorrowing for the plain.
We came to the Ææan isle; there dwelt Circe, dread Goddess, (kill'd in magic song,
Sister of sage Æætes; them the Sun,
Bright luminary of the world, begat
On Perse, daughter of Oceanus †.

* The word has the authority of Shakespear, and signifies over-hanging.
† Æætes was king of Colchis and father of Medea.—B. & C.
Our vessel silently * we grounded there
Within a spacious haven, thither led By some celestial Pow'r. We disembark'd,
And on the coast two days and nights entire Extended lay, with labour worn, and each
The victim of his heart-devouring woes.
Then, with my spear and with my faulchion arm'd,
I left the ship to climb with hasty steps
An airy height, thence, hoping to espy
Some works of man, or hear, perchance, a voice.
Exalted on a rough rock's craggy point
I stood, and on the distant plain, beheld
Smoke which from Circe's palace through the gloom
Of trees and thickets rose. That smoke discern'd,
I ponder'd next if thither I shou'd hasten,
Seeking intelligence. Long time I mused,
But chose at last, as my discreter course,
To seek the sea-beach and my bark again,
And, when my crew had eaten, to dispatch
Before me, others, who shou'd first enquire.
But, ere I yet had reach'd my gallant bark,
Some God with pity viewing me alone
In that untrodden solitude, sent forth

* Being made extremely cautious by the mischiefs they had suffered both from the Cyclops and the Læfrigonians.—C.
An antler'd stag full-sized into my way.
His woodland pastures left, he fought the stream,
For he was thirsty and already parch'd
By the sun's heat. Him issuing from his haunt,
Sheer through the back beneath his middle spine
I wounded, and the lance sprang forth beyond.
Moaning he fell, and in the dust expired.
Then, treading on his breathless trunk, I pluck'd
My weapon forth, which leaving there reclined,
I tore away the osiers with my hands
And fallows green, and to a fathom's length
Twisting the gather'd twigs into a band,
Bound fast the feet of my enormous prey,
And, flinging him athwart my neck, repair'd
Toward my sable bark, propp'd on my lance,
Which now to carry shoulder'd as before
Surpafs'd my pow'r, so bulky was the load.
Arriving at the ship, I there let fall
My burthen, and, assembling on the beach
My people, thus their drooping spirits cheer'd.
Rejoice, my friends! We shall not, though distress'd,
Seek Pluto's realm till thither sent by Fate.
Come—we will banquet now, not die consumed
With famine, wanting neither food nor wine.
I spake; at once obedient, from the ground,
Their folded brows unmantling, all arose,
And
And with admiring eyes (for of a bulk
To be admired was he) the flag survey'd,
Till having gazed their fill, their hands they laved,
And preparation made of noble cheer.
That day complete, till set of sun, we spent Feasting deliciously without restraint,
And quaffing gen'rous wine; but when the sun
Went down, and darkness overshadow'd all,
Extended, then, on Ocean's bank we lay;
And when Aurora, daughter of the dawn,
Look'd rosy forth, convening all my crew
To council, I arose, and thus began.

My fellow-voyagers, however worn
With num'rous hardships, hear! for neither West
Know we, nor East, where rises, or where sets
The all-enlight'ning sun. But let us think,
If thought perchance may profit us, of which Small hope I see; for when I lately climb'd
Yon craggy rock, I saw that we had reach'd
An isle encircled by the boundless Deep;
Flat lies the land, and in the midst I mark'd
Dun smoke ascending from an oaken bow'r.

I spake, whom they with hearts half-broken heard,
Recalling fell Antiphatas to mind
The Læstrygonian, and the Cyclops' deeds,
Ferocious feeder on the flesh of man.

Aloud
Aloud they wept; fast flow'd the tears of each; But neither tears nor cries avail'd them aught. Then, separating all my valiant friends In equal portions, I assign'd a Chief To either band, myself to these, to those Godlike Eurylochus. This done, we cast The lots into the helmet, and at once Forth sprang the lot of bold Eurylochus. He went, and with him of my people march'd Twenty and two; they sorrowing to depart, Nor we less mourning to be left behind. Low in a vale, but on an open spot, They found the splendid house of Circe, built With polish'd stones, and compass'd all around By lions on all sides and mountain-wolves Tamed by herself with drugs of noxious pow'rs*.

Hence groans were heard, and the vex't lion's voice Scorning his chain, and growling through the Dark, And bristly boars, and at the manger bound Bears murmuring, and huge wolves howling loud, Whom, human once, with drugs of mighty pow'r The forceless had changed to brutal forms.

The passages are not exactly parallel: Homer describes wild beasts tamed,
Nor were they mischievous, but as my friends
Approach'd, arising on their hinder feet,
Paw'd them in blandishment, and wagg'd the tail.
As, when from feast he rises, dogs around
Their master fawn, custom'd to receive
Some soothing gift from his familiar hand,
Around my people, so, those talon'd wolves
And lions fawn'd. They, terrified, that troop
Of savage monsters horrible beheld.
And now, before the Goddess's gates arrived,
They heard the voice of Circe singing sweet
Within, while, busied at the loom, she wove
An ample web immortal, such a work
Transparent, graceful, and of bright design
As hands of Goddesses alone produce.
Thus then Polites, Prince of men, the friend
Highest in my esteem, the rest bespake.

My friends! some damsel or some Goddess weaves
An ample web within, and strikes, the while,
With such melodious strains the marble walls,
That all the palace rings. Haste—Call aloud.

He ceas'd; they call'd; soon issuing at the sound,
The Goddess open'd wide her splendid gates, tamed, and Virgil men transformed to beasts. There is no room, therefore, for the comparison made by Scaliger, or for the preference which he gives to Virgil.—See Clarke.
And bade them in; they, heedless, all complied,
All save Eurylochus, who fear'd a snare.*
She, intrdoucing them, conducted each
To a bright throne, then gave them Pramnian wine,
With grated cheese, pure meal, and honey new,
But medicated with her pois'nous drugs
Their food, that in oblivion they might lose
The wish of home. She gave them, and they drank,—
When, smiting each with her enchanting wand,
She shut them in her sties. In head, in voice,
In body, and in bristles they became
All swine, yet intellect'd as before.
There Circe shut them all, who weeping fed
On acorns, chestnuts, and the cornel-fruit,
Food grateful ever to the groveling swine.

Back flew Eurylochus toward the ship,
To tell the woful tale; struggling to speak,
Yet speechless, there he stood, his heart transfixed
With anguish, and his eyes with tears replete.
Me boding terrors occupied. At length,
When, gazing on him, all had oft enquired,
He thus rehearsed to us the dreadful change.

* He feared a snare from the singularity of all that he observed; wild beasts tractable as spaniels, and a person, woman in appearance and all alone, inviting so many men unknown to her, without discoverning the smallest apprehension.— B. & C.

Renown'd
Renown'd Ulysses! as thou bad'st, we went Through yonder oaks; imbosom’d in a vale,
But built conspicuous on a swelling knoll
With polish’d rock, we found a stately dome*.
Within, some Goddess or some woman wove.
An ample web, and caroll’d sweet the while.
They call’d aloud; she, issuing at the voice,
Unfolded, soon, her splendid portals wide,
And bade them in. Heedless they enter’d, all,
But I remain’d, suspicious of a snare.
Erelong the whole band vanish’d, none I saw Thenceforth, though, seated there, long time I watch’d.

He ended; I my studded faulchion huge
Athwart my shoulder cast, and seized my bow,
Then bade him lead me thither by the way
Himself had gone; but with both hands my knees
He clasp’d, and in wing’d accents sad exclaim’d.

My King! ah lead me not unwilling back,
But leave me here; for confident I judge
That neither thou wilt bring another thence,
Nor come thyself again. Haste—fly we swift
With these, for we, at least, may yet escape.

* Ηἵομεν, ως ἠκέλευς,
Εξαπνέων εἰς διστην

The omission of the conjunctive καί is admired by Dionysius Hal.: as a great beauty, the effect of it being not only rapidity but emphasis.—C.
So he, to whom this answer I return'd.

Eurylochus! abiding here, eat thou
And drink thy fill beside the fable bark;
I go; necessity forbids my stay.

So saying, I left the galley and the shore.

But ere yet, travelling that gloomy vale,
I reach'd the palace where th' enchantress dwelt,
Hermes, post'fessor of the golden wand,
Met me. Some stripling in his prime he seem'd
His cheeks cloth'd newly with their earlist down,
For youth is then most graceful; faft he lock'd
His hand in mine, and thus, familiar, spake.

Unhappy! whither, wand'ring o'er the hills,
Stranger to all this region, and alone,
Go'ft thou? Thy people are within the walls
Of Circe prifon'd, where as swine in sties
She keeps them. Com'ft thou to release thy friends?
I tell thee, never wilt thou thence return
Thyself, but wilt be prifon'd with the rest.
Yet hearken—I will disappoint her wiles,
And will preserve thee. Take this precious drug;
This holding, enter thou the Goddes's house
Boldly, for it shall save thy life from harm.
Lo! I reveal to thee the cruel arts
Of Circe; learn them. She will mix for thee
A potion, and will also drug thy food

With
With noxious herbs; but she shall not prevail
By all her pow'r to change thee; for the force
Superiour of this noble plant, my gift,
Shall baffle her. Hear till what I advise.
When she shall smite thee with her slender rod,
With faulchion drawn and with death-threat'ning looks Rush on her, terrified, to her embrace
She will invite thee; neither thou refuse
The Goddess' offer'd love, secure to win
Deliv'rance for thy friends, and for thyself
Reception kind and bounteous in return.
But force her I swear the dreaded oath of heav'n
That she will other mischief none devise Against thee, lest she strip thee of thy might,
And, quenching all thy virtue, make thee vile*

So spake propitious Hermes, and the drug Pluck'd from the soil to my possession gave,
With knowledge of its pow'rs. The root was black,
Milk-white the blossom; Moly is its name

* ———— ———— Circes pocula nōtī;
Qve sī cum locīs stultus cupidusque bibītis,
Sub domīnā meretrici suīlet turpis et excors;
Vixīlet canis immundus, vel amīca luto lus.

Hor. Epis: Lib. I, 2, 23.—G,

———— ———— they haft heard of Circe's cup;
Which drinking, like the greedy fools his friends,
He had become an harlot's heartless drudge;
A filthy cur had lived, or filthier swine.
In heav’n; not easily by mortal man
Dug forth, but all is easy to the Gods.
Then, Hermes through the island-woods repair’d
To heav’n, and I to Circe’s dread abode,
In gloomy musings busied as I went.
Within the vestibule arrived, where dwelt
The beauteous Goddess, stay’ning there my steps,
I call’d aloud; she, sudden, at the voice
Appearing, threw the splendid portals wide
And bade me in; I, sorrowful, obey’d,
She placed me on an argent-studded throne
Foot-stool’d beneath, and for my drink prepared
The Pramnian mixture in a golden cup,
Impregnating, on my destruction bent,
With noxious herbs the draught. I drain’d secure
And unimpaired the goblet, when, incensed,
She smote me with her wand, and thus exclaim’d—

Now seek the fly. There wallow with thy friends.
She spake; I drawing from beside my thigh
My faulchion keen, with death-denouncing looks Rush’d on her; she with screams of terror ran Beneath my lifted arm, seized fast my knees,
And in wing’d accents plaintive thus began.

* Mercury was the God of instruction, and Moly is an allegorical plant by which instruction or salutary discipline is intended.—B.
Amazed I see thee with that potion drench'd,
Yet unenchanted; never man before
Once pass'd it through his lips, and liv'd the same;
But in thy breast a mind inhabits, proof
Against all charms. Come then—I know thee well.
Thou art Ulysses versatil and shrewd,
Of whose arrival here in his return
From Ilium, Hermes of the golden wand
Was ever wont to tell me. Sheath again
Thy sword, and let us, on my bed reclined,
Mutual embrace, that we may trust thenceforth
Each other, without jealousy or fear.

The Goddess spake, to whom I thus replied.
O Circe! canst thou bid me meek become
And gentle, who beneath thy roof detain'ft
My fellow-voyagers transform'd to swine?
And, fearing my escape, invit'ft thou me
To share thy couch, with fraudulent design
First to unarm, and to unman me, next?
No—trust me—never will I share thy bed
Till first, oh Goddess, thou consent to swear
The dread all-binding oath, that other harm
Against myself thou wilt imagine none.

I spake, and, undelaying, she complied.
When, therefore, nought of all her solemn oath
Unsworn remain'd, I climb'd her stately bed.
Four graceful nymphs, mean-time, their household trust
Administering, the palace briskly paced,
Her menials, from the fountains sprung and groves,
And from the sacred streams that seek the sea.
Of these, one cast fine linen on the thrones,
Which, next, with purple arras rich she spread;
Bright silver stands with golden dishes charged
Before the gorgeous thrones another placed,
The third, an argent beaker fill'd with wine
Delicious, which in golden cups she served;
The fourth brought water, which she warm'd within An ample vase, and when the simmering flood
Sang in the tripod, led me to a bath,
And laved me with the pleasant stream profuse
Pour'd o'er my neck and body, till my limbs
Refresh'd, all sense of lassitude resign'd.
When she had bathed me, and with limpid oil
Anointed me, and clothed me in a vest
And mantle, next, she led me to a throne
Of royal state, with silver studs emboss'd,
And footstool'd soft beneath; then came a nymph
With golden ewer charged and silver bowl,
Who pour'd pure water on my hands, and placed
The shining stand before me, which with food
Various, selected from her present stores,
The cat'ress spread; then, courteous, bade me eat.

But
But me it pleas’d not; with far other thoughts
My spirit teem’d, on vengeance more intent.
Soon, then, as Circe mark’d me on my feat
Fast-rooted, fullen, nor with outstretch’d hands
Deigning to touch the banquet, she approach’d,
And in wing’d accents suasive thus began.

Why fits Ulysses like the Dumb, dark thoughts
His only food? loathes he the touch of meat,
And taste of wine? Thou fear’st, as I perceive,
Some other snare, but idle is that fear,
For I have sworn the inviolable oath.

She ceas’d, to whom this answer I return’d.
How can I eat? what virtuous man and just O Circe! could endure the taste of wine
Or food, till he should see his prison’d friends
Once more at liberty? If then thy wish
That I should eat and drink be true, restore
My loved companions to these eyes again.

So I; then Circe, bearing in her hand
Her potent rod, went forth, and op’ning wide
The fly, drove thence my friends, none smaller-sized Than, after nine years growth, the pamper’d brawn.

* Xenocrates arriving at the court of Antipater, in the office of an ambassad’or employed to solicit the release of Athenians whom he had taken prisoners, and being invited to his table, answered the invitation in these lines. The conqueror was so well pleased with the application that he released the captives immediately.—C.
They stood before me; she through all the herd
Proceeding, each anointed with a charm
Of other pow’rs, and at the wholesome touch
All shed the swinish bristles by the drug
Dread Circe’s former magic gift, produced.
Restored at once to manhood, they appear’d
More vig’rous far, and sightlier than before.
Conscious of me, they seized with tender grasp Their leader’s hand. Tears follow’d, but of joy,
And with loud cries the vaulted palace rang.
Even the awful Goddess felt, herself,
Compasion, and, approaching me, began.

Laertes’ noble son, for wiles renown’d!
Hence to the shore, and to thy gallant bark;
First, hale her safe aground, then, hiding all
Your arms and treasures in the caverns, come
Thyself again, and hither lead thy friends.

So spake the Goddess, and my gen’rous mind
Persuaded; thence repairing to the beach,
I sought my ship; arrived, I found my crew
Lamenting miserably, and their cheeks
With tears bedewing ceaseless at her side.
As when the calves within some village rear’d
Behold, at eve, the herd returning home
From fruitful meads where they have grazed their fill,
Forth rulbing from the fall, they blame and sport
Around their mothers with a ceaseless joy,
Such joy, at sight of me, dissolved in tears
My grateful friends, and each his spirit felt
With like affections warm'd as he had reach'd
At length his country, and his city seen,
Fair Ithaca, where he was born and rear'd.
Then in wing'd accents tender thus they spake.

Noble Ulysses! thy appearance fills
Our soul with transports, such as we should feel Arrived in safety on our native shore.
But speak—how perish'd our unhappy friends?

So they; when, cheering them, I thus replied.
Hale ye the vessel first ashore, and hide
In caverns all our treasures and our arms;
Then haste to follow me, and ye shall soon
Behold your happy friends, beneath the roof
Of Circe banqueting and drinking wine,
For dearth of nought with her they feel or fear.

So I; whom all with readiness obey'd,
All save Eurylochus; he fought alone
To stay the rest, and, eager, interposed.

Ah whither tend we, miserable men?
Why covet ye this evil, to go down
To Circe's palace? she will change us all
To lions, wolves, or swine, that we may guard
Her palace? by necessity constrain'd.

So
So some were pris’ners of the Cyclops erst,
When, led by rash Ulysses, our lost friends
Intruded needlessly into his cave,
And perish’d by the folly of their Chief.

He spake; whom hearing, half resolv’d I stood
With my keen faulchion from beside me drawn,
To tumble his lopp’d head into the dust,
Although he were my kinsman in the bonds
Of close affinity; but all my friends
As with one voice, thus gently interposed.

Our noble Chief! Command that he remain
Our vessel’s guard, while we thy steps attend
That shall conduct us where the Goddesδs dwells.

So saying, they left the galley, and set forth
Climbing the coast; nor would Eurylochus
Beside the hollow bark remain, but join’d
His comrades, by my dreadful menace awed.
Circe, the while, my friends, her happy guests
Had nought neglected, but to each had giv’n
Warm bath, smooth unction, vest and fleecy cloak,
And feasting, when we came, we found them all.
They met, they greeted, and the wond’rous tale
Of transformation told, all wept aloud
Till the wide dome resounded. Then approach’d
The graceful Goddesδ, and address’d me thus.

Laertes’ noble son, for wiles renown’d!
Provoke ye not each other, now, to tears.
I am not ignorant, myself, how dread
Have been your woes, both on the shifty Deep,
And on the land by force of hostile pow’rs.
But come—Eat now, and drink ye wine, that so
Your freshen’d spirit may revive, and ye
Like courage feel again, as when ye left
The rugged shores of Ithaca, your home.
For now, through recollection, day by day,
Of all your pains and toils, ye are become Exhausted, strengthless, and a cheerful mind
Know never, such have been your num’rous woes.

She spake, whose invitation kind prevail’d,
And won us to her will. There, then, we dwelt
The year complete, with fav’ry viands fed
Day after day, and quaffing gen’rous wine.
But when the year, with all its waning moons
And tedious days, fulfill’d, another year
Its circling course began, my faithful friends
Then summon’d me abroad, and thus they said.

Sir! recollect thy country, if indeed
Propitious fate ordain thee to behold
Thy native shores and high-built home again.

So they; whose admonition I receiv’d
Well-pleas’d. Then, all the the day, regaled we fat.

At
At Circe's board with fav'ry viands rare,
And quaffing richest wine; but when, the sun
Declining, darkness overshadow'd all,
Then, each within the dusky palace took Custom'd repose, and to the Goddes's bed
Magnificent ascending, there I urged
My carnest suit, which gracious she receiv'd,
And in wing'd accents earnest thus I spake.

O Circe! let us prove thy promise true;
Dismiss us hence. My own desires, at length,
Tend homeward vehement, and the desires
No less of all my friends, who with complaints
By thee unwitness'd, wear my heart away.

So I; to whom the Goddes's in return.
Laertes' noble son, Ulysses famed
For deepest wisdom! dwell not longer here,
Thou and thy followers, in my abode
Reluctant; but your next must be a course Far different; hence departing, ye must seek
The dreary house of Ades and of dread
Persephone, that ye may there consult Theban Tiresias, prophet blind, but blest
With faculties which death itself hath spared,
On whom alone Persephone bestows
A mind prophetick, while all others flit Mere forms, the shadows of what once they were *

She spake; whose awful tidings I received
Heart-broken; weeping on the bed I sat,
Reckless of life and of the light of day.
But when, with tears and rolling to and fro
Satiate, I felt relief, I thus replied.

O Circe! with what guide shall I perform
This voyage, unperform’d by living man?

I spake, when instantly the Goddess thus—Brave Laertiaades! let not the fear
To want a guide distress thee. Once on board,
Your mast erected, and your shining sail
Unfurl’d, fit thou; the breathing North shall waft Thy vessel on. But when ye shall have cross’d
The broad expanse of Ocean, and shall reach
The oozy shore, where grow the poplar groves
And fruitless willows wan of Proserpine,
Push thither through the gulphly Deep thy bark,
And, landing, haste to Pluto’s murky abode.

* A curious story, but unfit for translation, is related by the Scholiast concerning the cause of his blindness.—B. & C.

Hauta, the daughter of Tirefias, rivalled her father in prophetick skill, and, residing at Delphos, carried the art to a much greater degree of perfection. Possessed of wonderful natural talents, she composed most of her oracular responses in verse of different structures, and many of her lines Homer is said to have appropriated and to have applied them to the embellishment of his poems.

Diod. Sic. Hist. lib. iv.—C.

There
There, into Acheron runs not alone
Dread Pyriphersgethon, but Cocytus loud,
From Styx derived; there also stands a rock,
At whose broad base the roaring rivers meet*.
There, thrusting, as I bid, thy bark ashore,
O Hero! scoop a trench, in length and breadth
A measured cubit, and libation pour
Around, for all the nations of the Dead;
First, milk with honey mixt, then luscious wine,
Then water, sprinkling, last, meal over all.
Next, offer supplication to the forms
And shadows of the Dead, and vow to slay
In thy own palace, shouldst thou safe return,
An heifer, fairest of thy num'rous herds,
And to enrich unsparingly the pyre
With delicacies such as please the shades;
But, in peculiar, to Tiresias vow
A ram all fable, and of noblest size.
When thus thou hast propitiated with pray'r
All the illustrious nations of the dead,
Slay for them, next, in sacrifice a ram
And fable ewe, turning the face of each
Right toward Erebus, and look thyself,

* Acheron signifies the river of woe, Pyriphersgethon, the river that burns with fire, Cocytus the river of wailing, and Styx, of hatred.

Mean-time,
Mean-time, askance toward the river's course.
Souls num'rous, soon, of the departed dead
Will thither flock; then, strenuous urge thy friends, Flaying the victims which thy ruthless steel
Hath slain, to burn them, and to soothe by pray'r
Illustrious Pluto and dread Proserpine.
While thus is done, thou seated at the sofs,
Faulchion in hand, chase thence the airy forms
Asar, nor suffer them to approach the blood,
Till with Tiresias thou have first conferr'd.
Then, glorious Chief! the Prophet shall himself
Appear, who will instruct thee, and thy course
Delineate, measuring from place to place
Thy whole return athwart the sify flood.

While thus she spake, the golden dawn arose,
When, putting on me my attire, the nymph
Next, cloth'd herself, and girding to her waist
With an embroider'd zone her snowy robe
Graceful, redundant, veil'd her beauteous head.
Then, ranging the wide palace, I aroused
My followers, standing at the side of each—
Up! sleep no longer! let us quick depart,
For thus the Goddess hath, herself, advised.
So I, whose early summons my brave friends
With readiness obey'd. Yet even thence
I brought not all my crew. There was a youth, Yongest of all my train, Elpenor; one
Not much in estimation for desert
In arms, nor prompt in understanding more,
Who, seeking cooler air, which overcharged
With wine he needed, on the palace-roof
Of Circe slept, apart from all the rest.
Awaken'd by the clamour of my friends
Newly arisen, he also sprang to rise,
And, in his haste, forgetful where to find
The deep-descending stairs, plunged through the roof.
That shock his neck-bone, parting at the joint,
Sustain'd not, and his spirit fought the shades.

Then, thus to my assembling friends I spake.
Ye think, I doubt not, of an homeward course,
But Circe points me to the drear abode
Of Proserpine and Pluto, to consult
The spirit of Tiresias, Theban seer.

I ceased, and they those awful tidings heard
Heart-broken; down they sat, lamenting loud
Their mournful lot, and plucking each his hair;
Yet profit none of all their sorrow found.

But while we sought my galley on the beach,
With aching hearts and ever-flowing tears,
Circe, the while, descended to the shore,
That she might bind beside the bark a ram
And fable ewe, but pass'd us unperceived;

For
For who, when they consent not to be seen,
Can see the Gods, what way soe'er they move *?

* ὅτι τις αὐτῶν
Εἰσερχομεν, αὐτὸς δὲ γε πάντας ὑπάται.
Orpheus apud Clem. Alex.—C.

who sees,
Himself invisible, all human-kind.
Ulysses relates to Alcinoüs his voyage to the infernal regions, his conference there with the prophet Tiresias concerning his return to Ithaca, and gives him an account of the heroes, heroines, and others whom he saw there.

BOOK XI.

We reach'd the ship, which haling downward, first Into the sacred Deep, we placed on board Her mast and sails, the ram and sable ewe, Then enter'd weeping and distress'd, ourselves. And now, melodious Circe, nymph divine, Sent after us a canvas-stretching breeze, Pleasant companion of our course, and we (The tackle once adjusted) on the seats Reposing, needed but the pilot's aid.
All day, with sails distended, o'er the Deep
She flew, and when the sun, at length, declined,
And twilight dim had shadow'd all the ways,
Approach'd the bourn of Ocean's vast profound.

The city, there, of the Cimmerians stands
With clouds and darkness veil'd, on whom the sun
Deigns not to look with his beam-darting eye,
Or when he climbs the starry arch, or when Earthward he slopes again his west'ring wheels;
But fad night canopies the wofal race.

We haled the bark aground, and, landing there
The ram and fable ewe, beside the brink
Of Ocean journey'd whither Circe bade,
Eurylochus and Perimedes here
The victims held, while with my faulchion drawn
I scoop'd an hollow trench in measur'd length
And breadth, a cubit, and libation pour'd

* Milton,
† A people who inhabited the shore of the Paphlagon, where they are said to have dwelt in excavations of the earth, communicating with each other by subterraneous passages. Strabo says that they subsisted partly by mining for metals and partly by prophecy; they had an oracle at a great depth under-ground, and those of them whose business it was in particular to attend it, never saw the sun, emerging from their caverns only in the night.—C.

The night is called υδρ ξανθή, because it was an unnatural one. To the proper night Homer generally gives the epithet ἀρρέσφροφον.—C.
Around for all the nations of the Dead,
First, milk with honey mixt, then luscious wine,
Then water; sprinkling, last, meal over all.
This done, adoring the unreal forms
And shadows of the dead, I vow'd to flay,
In my own palace, 'should I safe return,
An heifer, fairest of my num'rous herds,
And to enrich unsparingly the pyre
With delicacies, such as please the shades.
But, in peculiar, to the Theban seer
I vow'd, in size superior to the rest
A fable ram. When thus I had implored
With vows and pray'r the nations of the dead,
Piercing the victims next, I turn'd them both
To bleed into the trench; then swarming came From Erebus the shades of the deceased,
Brides, youths unwedded, seniors who had lived
Long time familiar with oppressive cares,
And girls, afflicted never till they died.
Came also num'rous warriors by the spear
In battle pierced, with armour gore-distain'd,
And stalk'd in multitudes around the foss
With dreadful clamours; me pale horror seized.
Then, all in haste, I importuned my friends
Flaying the victims which myself had slain,
To burn them, and to supplicate in pray'r
Illustrious Pluto and dread Proserpine *.
I sat the while, and with my faulchion drawn
Forbade the thronging ghosfs to approach the blood,
Till with Tirefias I should first confer.

The spirit, first, of my companion came,
Elpenor; for no burial honours yet
Had he received, but we had left his corse
In Circe's palace, tomblefs, undeeplored,
Ourselves by pressure urged of other cares.
Him seeing, with compassion touch'd I wept,
And in wing'd accents of his fate enquired.

Elpenor! how cam'st thou into the realms
Of darkness? Haft thou, though on foot, so far Outstripp'd my speed, who in my bark arrived?

So I, to whom with tears he thus replied.
Laertes' noble son, for wiles renown'd!
Fool'd by some demon and the intemp'rate bowl,
I perish'd in the house of Circe; there
Forgetful of the deep-descending steps,
I fell precipitated from the roof.
That shock my neck-bone, parting at the joint,
Sustain'd not, and my spirit sought the shades.

* Because Ulysses himself departed not from the trench he had opened, but stood guarding the blood continually, according to the instruction given him by Circe. — B. & C.
But now, by those whom thou hast left at home,
By thy Penelope, and by thy fire,
The gentle guardian of thine infant years,
And by thy only son Telemachus
I now adjure thee, for full well I know
That from the house of Pluto safe return'd,
Thou shalt ere long thy gallant vessel moor
At the Ææan isle. Ah! there arrived
Remember me, nor leave me undeplored
And uninhumed, left vengeance, for my sake,
Attend thee from the Gods; but burn my corpse
With whatsoever arms I left, and raise
A kind memorial of me on the shore,
Heap'd high with earth; that an unhappy man
May yet enjoy an unforgotten name.
Thus do at my request, and on my hill
Funereal fix erect the polish'd oar,
With which among my friends I lately row'd.*

He spake, to whom thus answer I return'd.
Poor youth! I will perform thy whole desire.
Thus we, there sitting, doleful converse held,
I, stretching my bright faulchion o'er the blood,

* It was a prevalent opinion among the Greeks, that the shades of the unburied dead were not permitted to mix with the shades of others. The Scholiast observes that he saw not those who had been devoured by the Cyclops or the Lastrigians, because they, however horrible their sepulture, had yet a tomb.—C.
And my companion's shadowy semblance fad
With earnest speech discouraging me the while,
The soul of my departed mother, next,
Of Anticleia, daughter of the brave
Autolycus approach'd, whom going forth
To Ilion, I had living left at home*.
Her seeing, with compassion touch'd, I wept;
Yet even her, (although it pain'd my soul)
Forbade, relentless, to approach the blood,
Till with Tiresias I should first confer.
Then came the spirit of the Theban seer
Himself, his golden sceptre in his hand,
Who knew me, and, enquiring, thus began.

Why, wretched man! the sun's bright beams renounced,
Com'st thou to visit in this joyless place
The shades of men departed? Leave the trench,
And turn thy faulchion's glitt'ring edge away,
That I may drink the blood, and tell thee truth.

He spake; I thence receding, deep infixed
My glitt'ring faulchion in the sheath again,
And when the prophet from the crimson pool
Had drawn till satisfied, he thus began.

Thou seek'st a pleasant voyage home again,
Renown'd Ulysses! but a God will make

* The tradition is, that, unable to endure the long absence of her son, she hanged herself—B. & C.
That voyage difficult; for, as I judge,
Thou wilt not pass by Neptune unperceiv'd,
Whose anger still pursues thee, for the sake
Of Polypheme his son, made blind by thee.
At length, however, after num'rous woes,
Thou may'st attain, perchance, thy native isle,
If thy own appetite thou wilt control
And theirs who follow thee, what time thy bark
Well-built, shall at Thrinacia's shore arrive,
Escaped from perils of the gloomy Deep*.
There grazing ye shall find the flocks and herds
Of the all-seeing and all-hearing Sun,
Which, if attentive to thy safe return,
Thou leave unhar'm'd, though after num'rous woes,
Ye may at length your Ithaca regain†.
But if thou violate them, I denounce
Destruction on thy ship and all thy band,
And though thyself escape, thou shalt arrive
Late and afflicted, all thy people lost,

* The shore of Sicily, commonly called Trinacria, but Euphonice by Homer, Thrinacia. It took this name from its three promontories, Pelorus, Pachynus, and Lilybeum.—B. & C.

† It is plain that Homer, notwithstanding he says more than once, τιθέναι τις ἔρωτις ἔμαθαι, was not in the strict sense of the word a Fatalist, but understood Man to be a Free Agent, and to have an option respecting all those points of his conduct with which his future happiness or misery was connected.—C.
And in a foreign bark. Distress, besides, Awaits thee there, for thou shalt find within Proud suitors of thy noble wife, who waste Thy substance, and with promis'd spousal gifts Ceaseless solicit her to wed; yet well Shalt thou avenge all their injurious deeds. That once perform'd, and ev'ry suitor slain Either by stratagem, or face to face In thy own palace, bearing, as thou go'ft, An oar, cease not to journey till thou find A people who the sea know not, nor eat Food salted; they trim galley crimson-prow'd Have ne'er beheld, nor yet smooth-shaven oar, With which the vessel wing'd scuds o'er the waves*. Well thou shalt know them; this shall be the sign— When thou shalt meet a traveller, who shall name The oar on thy broad shoulder borne, a van†, There, deep infixing it within the foil, Worship the King of Ocean with a bull, A ram, and a lascivious boar; then seek Thy home again, and sacrifice at home

* Evidently with a view to appease and propitiate Neptune, who would thus see a nation, lately ignorant of the sea and of all maritime affairs, instructed in them by Ulysses, suddenly become his votaries.

† Mistaking the oar for a corn-van. A sure indication of his ignorance of maritime concerns.
An hecatomb to the Immortal Gods,
Adoring duly each, and in his course.
So shalt thou die in peace a gentle death,
Remote from Ocean; it shall find thee late,
In soft serenity of age, the Chief
Of a blest people.—I have told thee truth.

So spake the seer, to whom I thus replied—
The Gods themselves, Tirefias! have ordain’d
My suff’rings such. But tell me, for I need
Thy sage instruction still, and tell me true.
Sullen and mute and with averted looks
Here sits, beside the trench, my mother’s shade—
How shall she know me once so dearly loved?

So I; when answer thus the seer return’d.
The means are easy; learn them; they are these.
What shade so’er, by leave from thee obtain’d,
Shall taste the blood, that shade will tell the truth;
The rest, prohibited, will all retire.

When thus the spirit of the royal Seer

* It is doubtful whether ἄνωτος ἐξ ἀλὸς signifies a death that should reach him by means of the sea, or at a distance from it. They who choose the former sense, say that Ulysses was slain by his son Telethonus whom he had by Circe. He had wandered far in quest of his father, when arriving at Ithaca and not being permitted to land, he fought with his opposers who knew him not, and killed Ulysses. But this interpretation but very ill accords with the epithet Ἀσκοντις, gentle, peaceful, more like sleep than death.—B. & C.
Had his prophetic mind reveal'd, again
He enter'd Pluto's gates; but I unmoved
Still waited till my mother's shade approach'd;
She drank the blood, then knew me, and in words
Wing'd with affection, plaintive, thus began.

How, Oh my son! still living, hast thou reach'd
This darksome region? Arduous is the task
For living man to mingle with the Dead.
Broad rivers roll, and awful floods between,
And Ocean wider still, whose gulphs forbid
All access, save to well-built barks alone.
Is this sad shore the first, where, thou and thine
After long wand'ring from the shores of Troy
Have disembark'd? And hast thou not beheld Thy confor't yet, nor reach'd thy native home?

She spake, to whom this answer I return'd.
My mother! me necessity constrain'd
To Pluto's dwelling, anxious to consult Theban Tirefias; for I have not yet
Approach'd Achaia, nor have touch'd the coast
Of Ithaca, but have been evermore
A woful wand'rer, since I follow'd first King Agamemnon to the war of Troy.
But speak, my mother, and the truth alone;
What stroke of fate slew thee? Fell'st thou a prey
To some foul malady? or by the shafts
Of gentle Dian suddenly subdued *?
Speak also of my fire, and of my son;
Share they such honours, as, allied to me,
They justly claim? Or have the people crown'd
Some other, through despair of my return?
What views have influenced, and what counsels most
The conduct of my wife? Persists the still Discharging tenderly the mother's part,
And wisely managing her home-concerns?
Or hath she wander'd to another mate,
And wedded with the noblest of the Greeks?
I ceas'd, when thus the venerable shade.
Not so; she faithful still and patient dwells
Beneath thy roof; but dwells a mourner there,
With weeping anguish wasted night and day.
Thy dignities and fair possessions still Continue thine; Telemachus, thy son,
Tills, undisturb'd, thy land, and fits a guest
At many a noble banquet, such as well
Beseems the splendour of his princely state,
For all invite him †. At his farm retired

* Death by a slow malady, or death by the shafts of Diana are set in opposition to each other; a sudden death being always signified by the latter.—C.
† The death of Anticlea seems to have happened prior to the intrusion of the suitors and the havock they made of his substance.—C.

It appears to have been customary with the antients to invite their princes and judges to all their publick entertainments.—C.
Thy father dwells, nor to the city comes
For aught; nor bed, nor furniture of bed,
Furr'd cloaks or splendid arras he enjoys,
But, with his servile hinds all winter sleeps
In ashes and in dust beside the fire,
Coarsely apparell'd, and when summer comes,
Or genial autumn, on the fallen leaves
In any nook, not curious where, he finds
An humble couch among his fruitful vines.
There, stretch'd forlorn, indulging hopeless grief,
And worn with age, thy fortune he deplores.
So perish'd I; such fate I also found *
Me, neither from above Diana pierced,
Right-aiming arch'rets, with her gentle shafts,
Nor any dread distemper, such as waftes
And slowly withers life, extinguish'd mine,
But dear remembrance of thy filial love
And kindness that should never soothe me more,
These, my Ulysses! fatal proved to me.

She said; I, ardent wish'd to clasp the shade
Of my departed mother; thrice I sprang

* The comparison is between her grief and that of Laertes, not between the effects of it. His grief enfeebles and wears him out gradually; hers impelled her at once to an act of desperation. She is silent, however, concerning the manner of her death, on account of the guilty nature of it, which would have shocked her son had she owned it.
Toward her, by desire impetuous urged,
And thrice she flitted from between my arms,
Light as a passing shadow or a dream.
Then, pierced by keener grief, in accents wing'd
With filial earnestness I thus replied.

My mother, why elud'st thou my attempt
To clasp thee, that ev'n here, in Pluto's realm,
We might to full satiety indulge
Our grief, infolded in each other's arms?
Hath Proserpine, offended, sent me forth
An empty shade, t' afflict me still the more?

Then, infant, thus the venerable form.
Ah, son! thou most afflicted of mankind!
On thee, Jove's daughter, Proserpine, obtrudes
No vain illusion, but a fixt decree
Such renders, once deceased, all human-kind.
Thenceforth, no muscular support they need,
Divestied, by the fierce funereal fires,
Of flesh and bones; and when the mind expell'd
Hath left the limbs all lifeless, like a dream
The unsubstantial soul, then, flits away.
But haste thou back to light, and, taught thyself
These sacred truths, hereafter teach thy spouse.

Thus

* Muretus understood this precept given to Ulysses by his mother in a sense similar to the sense of Virgil's—portaque emittit eburna—
that
Thus mutual we conferr’d. Then, thither came,
Sent from beneath by Proserpine, the shades
Of num’rous women, wives and daughters, all,
Of Kings and Heroes. Close around the trench,
Eager to drink the crimson pool they stood.
But I, consid’ring fat, how I might each Interrogate, and thus resolv’d. My sword
Forth drawing from beside my sturdy thigh,
Firm I prohibited the ghosts to drink
The blood together; they succeffive came;
Each told her own distress; I question’d all.
There, first, the high-born Tyro I beheld;
She claim’d Salmoneus* as her sire, and her
Had Cretheus, fon of Æolus, espoused.
Enamour’d of Enipeus, stream divine,
Loveliest of all that water earth, beside His limpid current she was wont to stray,
When Ocean’s God, (Enipeus’ form assumed †)
Within the eddy-whirling river’s mouth that is to say, as a concealed infinuation of the contempt which the poet felt for the superflition on which his story was founded.

Plutarch also observes that Homer has done well to treat this conference of Ulysses with the shades of the deceased, as a tale credible only by credulous women.—C.

* Whom for counterfeiting his thunders Jove struck with a thunderbolt.—B. & C.

† Enipeus was a river of Elis which also ran through Thessaly.—B. & C.
Embraced her; there, while the o'er-arching flood,
Uplifted mountainous, conceal'd the God
And his fair human bride, her virgin zone
He loos'd, and o'er her eyes sweet sleep diffused.
His am'rous purpose satisfied, he grasp'd
Her hand, affectionate, and thus he said.

Rejoice in this my love, and when the year
Shall tend to consummation of its course,
Illustrious twins produce; for love divine
Is never fruitless. With affection due Sustain and cherish them, and well beware
That, going hence, thou boast not my embrace,
For I am Neptune, sov'reign of the Deep.

He said, and, whelm'd in ocean, disappear'd.
She Pelias bore and Neleus, heroes, both,
And sceptre-swaying delegates of Jove.
Pelias the plains of Æolchus own'd,
Of num'rous flocks possess'd; but his abode
Amid the sands of Pylus Neleus chose.
To Cretheus wedded next, the lovely nymph
Yet other sons, Æson and Pheres bore,
And Amythaon of equestrian fame.

I, next, the daughter of Asopus saw,
Antiope; she gloried to have known
Th' embrace of Jove himself, to whom she brought A double progeny, Amphion named

And
And Zethus; they the first foundations lay'd
And built the tow'rs of seven-gated Thebes,
For that, though valiant both, in spacious Thebes
Unfenced by tow'rs, they could not dwell secure *.

Alcmena, next, Amphitryon's wife I saw,
By Jove's embrace made mother of the bold
And lion-hearted Hercules; with Her
Came also Megara from Creon sprung,
And by th' unconquer'd Hercules espoused.

The beauteous Epicae saw I then,
Mother of Oedipus, who guilt incur'd
Enormous, fatally deceiv'd and match'd
With her own son; he, first, his father flew,
Then wedded her, which soon the Gods divulged †.
He, under vengeance of offended heav'n,
In pleasant Thebes dwelt miserable, King
Of the Cadmean race; she to the gates
Of Ades brazen-barr'd despairing went,
Self-strangled by a cord made fast aloft
To her own palace-roof, and woes bequeath'd (Such as the Fury sufferers execute Innumerable) to her guilty son.

* Homer takes no notice of the story of Amphion building the walls of Thebes by the magick influence of his lyre.—C. It was probably therefore invented since.
† By the Tragedians called—Jocasta.
There also lovely Chloris I beheld,
Amphion's last-born daughter, and the bride
Of Neleus, chosen for her beauties' sake,
And gifted, at his hands, with countless dow'rt.
Neleus supreme in sandy Pylus reign'd
And in Orchomenus, and fire became
Of an illustrious offspring; for the borb,
First, Nestor; Chromius, second; after whom Undaunted Periclymenus, and, last
His daughter Pero, wonder of all eyes,
Whom ev'ry neighbour of the Pylian realm
In marriage sought, but none might hope to win
From Neleus, save alone who should prevail
To drive from Phylace the guarded herds
Of King Iphiclus. Of them all, alone,
Melampus undertook that arduous task,
The Prophet; but by Fate's severe decree,
The herdsmen bound and held him pris'ner there.
At length (the year, with all its months and days Concluded, and the new-born year begun)
The King Iphiclus, for his wisdom' sake,
And grateful for mysterious sayings solved,
Released him, and the will of Jove was done*.

* Iphicles had been informed by the Oracles, that he should have no children till instructed by a prophet how to obtain them; a service which Melampus had the good fortune to render him.—B.
Next, Leda, wife of Tyndarus I saw,
Who bore to Tyndarus a noble pair,
Castror the bold, and Pollux cestus-famed.
Though pris’ners in the fertile womb of earth,
They still survive, and honour even there
From Jove obtain; by turns they die, they live,
Nor less than Gods in earth are deem’d or heav’n.

The confor of Aloëus, next, I view’d, Iphimedia. She to Neptune bore,
For Him she call’d their Father, a short-lived
But godlike Pair of never dying fame,
Otus and Ephialtes. Such for height,
And such for beauty, never by the fruits
Of earth were nourish’d, since Orion died.
Nine cubits were the breadth, nine ells the length,
At nine years growth, of each. The Gods themselves
They menaced, and preparing to disturb
With all-confounding war the realms above,
On the Olympian summit thought to fix

* Castror being slain by Meleager, or by Polynices, and Pollux being immortal, the latter entreated Jupiter that his brother might share his immortality with him, and that they might alternately ascend to Olympus and sink into the shades. Thus the Mythologists allegorized the alternate appearance and disappearance of the two stars named Castror and Pollux, one of which declines into the southern Hemisphere, while the other is seen in ours.—C.
Huge Ossa, and on Ossa's tow'ring head
Pelion with all his forests; so to climb,
By mountains heap'd on mountains, to the skies.*
Nor had they fail'd, to full-grown youth matured,
But by the son † of fair Latona slain
Both perish'd, ere the cheeks of either yet
The fleecy down of blooming manhood wore.

Phaedra I also there, and Procris saw,
And Ariadne for her beauty praised,
Whose fire was all-wise Minos. Theseus her
From Crete toward the fruitful region bore
Of sacred Athens, but enjoy'd not there;
For, first, she perish'd by Diana's shafts
In Dia, Bacchus witnessing her crime ‡.

Mæra and Clymene I saw beside,
And odious Eriphyle, who received
The price in gold of her own husband's life §.

 Ossa and Pelion were mountains of Thessaly. Olympus was a mountain of Macedonia.—B. & C.
† Apollo.
‡ Phaedra was the daughter of Minos and wife of Theseus; Procris was the daughter of Erechtheus.—Dia was an island near to Crete, and was afterward called Naxos. It was sacred to Bacchus.
Bacchus, therefore, accused her to Diana of having received the embraces of Theseus in his temple there, and the Goddess punished her with death.—B. & C.
§ Mæra was the daughter of Proetus and Anteia, and died a virgin. Clymene was the daughter of Minyus son of Neptune and But all the wives of Heroes whom I saw,
And all their daughters can I not relate;
Night, first, would fail; and even now the hour
Calls me to slumber either in my bark
Or here; mean-time, I in yourselves confide,
And in the Gods to shape my conduct home.

He ceased, and through the gloomy mansion all
Sat silent, charm'd to rapture, till, at length,
The beauteous Queen, Areta, thus began.

Phæacians! how appears he in your eyes
This stranger, graceful as he is in port,
In stature noble, and in mind discreet?
He is my guest; an honour which alike
All here partake; him, therefore, send not hence
With urgent haste, nor scantily impart
To one so destitute; for ye are rich,
And by kind heav'n with rare possessions blest.

The Hero, next, Echeneus spake, a Chief
Now antient, eldest of Phæacia's sons.
Wisely, my friends, and not below the praise of Euryanassa, and was married to Phylacus. Eriphyle was the daughter of Iphis; bribed by a golden ornament which she received either from Polynices or Adracontus, she betrayed her husband. Knowing as a prophet the event, he feared to go to the siegel of Thebes, and, in consequence of her treachery, was constrained to go. His name was Amphiaræus.—B. & C.

Which all her prudent counsels ever claim
The Queen hath now advised, and, if it please
Alcinoüs also, thus will we perform.

To whom the King Alcinoüs replied.
As surely as I live, and as I reign,
So shall be done; I ratify the word.
Then let the guest, though anxious to depart,
Wait till the morrow, that I may complete
The whole donation. His safe conduct home
Shall be the gen'ral care, but mine in chief,
To whom dominion o'er the rest belongs.

Him answer'd, then, Ulysses ever-wise.
Alcinoüs! Prince! exalted high o'er all
Phæacia's sons! should ye solicit, kind,
My stay throughout the year, preparing still My conduct home, and with illustrious gifts
Enriching me the while, ev'n that request
Should please me; for the 'vantage all were mine.
I should return still wealthier, and, arrived
In Ithaca, should readier welcome find,
And rev'rence more profound obtain from all.

To whom Alcinoüs answer thus return'd.
Ulysses! viewing thee, no fears we feel Left thou, at length, some false pretender prove,
Or subtle hypocrite, of whom no few Dissiminated o'er its face the earth

Sustains,
Sustains, adepts in fiction, and who frame
Fables, where fables could be least surmised.
Thy phrase well turn'd, and thy ingenuous mind
Proclaim thee differ't far, who hast in strains Harmonious, like a tuneful bard, rehears'd
The woes of all thy Grecians, and thy own.
But say, and tell me true. Beheld'ft thou there
None of thy followers to the walls of Troy Slain in that warfare? Lo! the night is long—
A night of utmost length; nor yet the hour
Invites to sleep*. Tell me thy wond'rous deeds,
For I could watch till sacred dawn, could'ft thou
So long endure to tell me of thy toils.

Then thus Ulysses, ever-wise, replied,
Alcinoüs! high exalted over all
Phæacia's sons! the time suffices yet
For converse and for sleep; and if thou wish
To hear still more, I shall not spare to unfold
More pitiable still, the woful end
Of other Grecians, after mine, destroy'd,
Who 'scaped, indeed, unslaughter'd from the field
Of Ilium, but, who reach'd their native shores
Only to perish, victims, at the last,

* This circumstance, according to Eustathius, is mentioned by the poet in order to ascertain the time,—C. which must have been in the winter, for at the end of the fourteenth book it is evidently a winter-night which Ulysses spends with Eumæus.
Of a perfidious woman's dark designs.*

Now, when chaste Proserpine had wide dispers'd
Those female shades, the mournful spirit, next,
Of Agamemnon, Atreus' son, appear'd;
Encircled by a throng, he came; by all
Who with himself beneath Ægisthus' roof
Their fate fulfilling, perish'd by the sword.
He knew me quickly, soon as he had drunk
The crimson pool; with lamentations loud
He pierced the gloom; tears trickling bathed his cheeks,
And with spread palms, through ardour of desire,
He sought to infold me fast, but vigour none,
Or force, as erst, his agile limbs inform'd.
I wept for pity at that sight, and thus
In words by friendship wing'd his shade address'd.

Ah glorious son of Atreus, King of men!
By what dire stroke of destiny subdued
Becam'ft thou pris'ner here? By cruel force
Of overbearing storms that whelm'd thy barks
Beneath the waves, at Neptune's dread command?
Or slain at home by robbers arm'd to seize Thy flocks and herds†; Or fighting to secure

* Clytemnestra.
† Having attempted himself the same thing at Iumarus, but unsuccessfully, and with the loss of many of his companions, he naturally suspeets that Agamemnon might have fallen in a similar enterprise.—B. & C.
From hostile pow'rs your city and your wives?
I ceased, when Agamemnon thus replied.
Ulysses, noble Chief, Laertes' son
For wisdom famed! I neither died by force
Of overbearing storms that whelm'd my barks
Beneath the waves, at Neptune's dread command,
Nor yet by spoilers of my flocks and herds,
But by the base Ægisthus. He, combined
With my perfidious wife, the fatal stroke
Contrived for me; he bade me to his house,
And slew me at his board, as at his crib
Men slay an ox. Thus miserably died
I and my friends around me, slaughter'd, all,
As at the nuptials of some wealthy Chief
Or other banquet, bleed the fatted boars
Bright-tusk'd, for service of his num'rous guests.
Thou hast already witness'd many a field
With warriors overspread, slain one by one;
But that dire scene had most thy pity moved;
For we, with brimming beakers at our side,
And underneath full tables, bleeding lay.
Blood floated all the pavement. Then the cries
Of Priam's daughter founded in my ears
Most pitiable of all, Caflandra's cries,
Whom Clytemnestra close beside me slew.
Expiring as I lay, I yet essay'd
To grasp my faulchion, but the trait’res quick Withdrew herself, nor would vouchsafe to close
My languid eyes, or prop my drooping chin
Ev’n in the moment when I sought the shades.
So that the thing breathes not, ruthless and fell
As woman once resolv’d on such a deed
Detestable as my base wife contrived,
The murther of the husband of her youth.*
I thought to have gladden’d by my safe return
My children, and the maidens of mine house,
But she, past measure profligate, hath poured
Shame on herself, on women yet unborn,
And even on the virtuous of her sex.

He ceas’d, to whom, thus, answer I return’d.
Gods! how severely hath the Thund’rer plagued
The house of Atreus, even from the first,
By female counsels! we for Helen’s sake
Have num’rous died, and Clytemnestra framed
While thou waft far remote, this snare for thee!

* Homer more than once tells us that Clytemnestra was never married till to Agamemnon, but Euripides, says Euripodius, knew the contrary, who affirms that she was married first to Tantalus. In his Iphigenia in Aulis he introduces her saying Γιγνομαι δικαια με κατ Αλεις βία.

Τις πρόδεα ἄδημα Τάνταλον κατακτανώτ. — C.

Against my will thou took’st me, and by force,
When thou hadst slain my first mate Tantalus.
So I, to whom Atrides thus replied.

Thou, therefore, be not pliant overmuch
To woman; trust her not with all thy mind,
But half disclose to her, and half conceal.*
Yet, from thy comfort's hand no bloody death,
My friend, hast thou to fear; for passing wife
Icarius' daughter is, far other thoughts,
Intelligent, and other plans, to frame.
Her, going to the wars, we left a bride
New-wedded, nourishing her infant boy,
Who, man himself, comforts ere now with men
A prosperous youth; his father, safe restored
To his own Ithaca, shall see him soon,
And he shall clasp his father in his arms
As nature bids; but me, my cruel one
Indulged not with the dear delight to gaze
On my Orestes, for she slew me first.
Yet deep repose this counsel in thy breast.
Steer secret to thy native isle; avoid Notice; for woman merits trust no more†.

* And yet, not because she was a woman, but because she was a wicked one, Clytemnestra thus dealt with her husband, and woman is not on her account to be deemed less worthy of trust than man. But it is natural to look with a suspicious eye to the quarter whence came the mischief by which we ourselves have suffered, and to caution others against it.—Dio, Orat. 74.—C.
† This is, surely, one of the most natural strokes to be found in any poet. Convinced, for a moment, by the virtues of Penelope,
Now tell me truly. Know ye by report
That still my son survives? where dwells he, say?
With antient Nestor at his Pylian home,
Or in Orchomenos, or else beneath
My brother's roof in Sparta's wide domain?
For my Orestes is not yet a shade.

So he, to whom I answer thus return'd.
Atrides, ask not me, for of his life
Or of his death I know not; words alone
Are empty sounds, and better far suppress'd.

Thus we discoursing mutual flood, and tears
Shedding disconsolate. Achilles' shade
Mean-time approach'd me, Peleus' mighty son;
Patroclus also, and Antilochus
Appear'd, with Ajax, for proportion just
And stature tall, (Pelides sole except) Distinguish'd above all Achaia's sons.
The soul of swift Æacides at once
Knew me, and in wing'd accents thus began.

Brave Laertiades, for wiles renown'd!
What bolder deed than this wilt thou devise?
How haft thou dared descend into the gloom
Of Hades, where the shadows of the Dead, he mentions her with respect; but, recollecting himself suddenly, involves even her in his general ill opinion of the sex, begotten in him by the crimes of Clytemnestra.

Forms
Forms without intellect, alone reside *?

So spake the Chief, whom answering thus I said.

O Peleus' son! Achilles! bravest far
Of all Achaia's race? I here arrived Seeking Tiresias, from his lips to learn
By what means I may reach the rugged coast
Of Ithaca; for, tossed by ceaseless storms,
Never have I approach'd Achaia's shore,
Or touch'd my country yet, from day to day
Still seeking it in vain. But as for Thee,
Felicity like thine, Achilles! none
Hath known, or shall hereafter; for the Greeks
Thee living honour'd ever as a God,
And thy control is even here supreme O'er all thy fellow-shades; indulge not then,
Achilles, ceaseless grief that thou hast died.

I ceased, and answer thus at once received.
Renown'd Ulysses! think not death a theme
Of consolation; I had rather live
The servile hind for hire, and eat the bread
Of some man scantily himself sustain'd,

* This is plainly the import of the word 'Aρραδίας, since none of them knew Ulysses, or could articulate, till they had drunk at the trench; after which they were inspired by Proserpine and enabled to converse with him.
Than sov'reign empire hold o'er all the shades.
But come—speak to me of my noble boy;
Proceeds he, as he promis'd, brave in arms,
Or shuns he war? Say also, hast thou heard
Of royal Peleus? shares he still respect
Among his num'rous Myrmidons, or scorn
In Hellas and in Phthia, for that age
Predominates in his enfeebled limbs?
For help is none in me; the glorious sun
No longer sees me such, as when in aid
Of the Achaians I o'erspread the field
Of spacious Troy with all their bravest slain.
Oh might I, vigorous as then, repair
For one short moment to my father's house,

* It seems plain, and so the answer of Achilles was understood by Dionysius Halicarn: that the abhorrence in which he holds the state of the Dead, and the emphatical preference he gives to Life when compared with it, arose from his desire of still greater glory, and from his inability to endure the wearisomeness of a condition so inactive. Therefore is it that, always consistent with himself, he had rather toil for lean wages and eat scanty bread, than be the supreme in authority over all below. In the same stile of complaint, he adds in the sequel

Οὐ γὰρ ἵων ἵππαρυγός, &c.
For help is none in me, the glorious Sun
No longer sees me such—what advantage have we, says the Critick abovementioned, from the possession of virtue, where we have no room to exert it?—C.

They
They all should tremble; I would show an arm,
Such as should daunt the fiercest who presumes
To injure him, or to despise his age.*

Achilles spake, to whom I thus replied.
Of noble Peleus have I nothing heard;
But I will tell thee, as thou bidd'st, the truth
Unseign'd of Neoptolemus thy son;
For him, myself, on board my hollow bark
From Scyros to Achaia's host convey'd†.
Oft as in council under Ilium's walls
Our Chiefs assembled, foremost he pronounced
His mind, and ever prudently; by none,
Save godlike Nestor and myself, excell'd.
Oft, too, as we with battle hemm'd around Troy's bulwarks, from among the mingled crowd
Thy son sprang foremost into martial act,
Emulous always of superiour fame.
Beneath him num'rous fell the sons of Troy
In dreadful fight, nor have I pow'r to name
Distinctly all, who by his glorious arm

* Another most beautiful stroke of nature. Ere yet Ulysses had had opportunity to answer, the very thought that Peleus may possibly be insulted, fires him, and he takes the whole for granted.
    Thus is the impetuous character of Achilles sustained to the last moment!

† This Ulysses did after the death of Achilles, for while he lived his son was not among the besiegers.—C. Scyros was a city of Dolopia.—B. & C.
Exerted in the cause of Greece, expired.
Yet will I name Eurypylus, the son
Of Telephus, an Hero whom his sword
Of life bereaved, and all around him strew'd
The plain with his Cetean warriors, won
To Ilium's side by bribes to women giv'n *
Save noble Memnon only, I beheld
No Chief at Ilium beautiful as he.
Again, when all our bravest to the horse
Of wood ascended, by Epeüs framed,
And I was charged to open or to shut
The hollow fraud; then, many a Grecian Chief
And Senator the tear in silence wiped
From his wan cheek, and trembled ev'ry limb;
But never saw I changed to terror's hue
His ruddy cheek, no tears wiped he away,
But oft he press'd me to go forth, his suit
With pray'rs enforcing, griping hard his hilt
And his brass-burthen'd spear, and dire revenge
Denouncing, ardent, on the race of Troy.
At length, when we had sack'd the lofty town

* Τυραϊον ηενον δόαρ—Priam is said to have influenced by gifts the wife and mother of Eurypylus, to persuade him to the assistance of Troy, he being himself unwilling to engage.—B. & C. The passage through defect of history has long been dark, and commentators have adapted different senses to it, all conjectural.
The Ceteans were a people of Myśia, and Telephus was their King.—B. & C.
Of Priam, laden with abundant spoils
He safe embark'd, nor pierced by shaft or spear
Sent from afar, nor smitten by the sword,
As oft in war befalls, where wounds are dealt Promiscuous, at the will of fiery Mars.

I spake, whose praises of his son, the ghost
Of swift Æacides exulting heard,
And measuring with larger strides, for joy,
The meadow gray with asphodel, retired.*

Thus, many a mournful ghost beside me stood
Rehearsing, each, his sorrow, and, alone,
The ghost of Ajax eyed me from afar,
Indignant that Achilles' armour left
By Thetis to the worthiest at the ships,
Troy and Minerva judges of the strife,
Not to himself had fallen, but to me†.
Fatal award! and which I now deplore,

* Κατ' ἀσφοδελὸν λειμῶνα—Asphodel was planted on the graves, and around the tombs of the deceased, and hence the supposition, that the Stygian plain was clothed with asphodel. F.

† Agamemnon, desirous not to seem partial to either of the competitors for the armour of Achilles, assembling the Trojan captives asked them whether Ajax or Ulysses had occasioned most lamentation in their city. They replied that their city had suffered most by Ulysses. When taking that as a just criterion of their respective merits, to Ulysses he gave the armour.—B. & C. The consequence to Ajax was such unsupportable disappointment and mortification that he slew himself.
Since Ajax (saw Achilles) in his form
And martial exploits foremost of the Greeks,
Now lies sepultured for that armour' sake!
I, seeking to appease him, thus began.

O Ajax, son of glorious Telamon!
Canst thou remember, even after death,
Thy wrath against me, kindled for the sake
Of those pernicious arms? arms which the Gods
Ordain'd of such dire consequence to Greece,
Which caused thy death, our bulwark! Thee we mourn
With grief perpetual, nor the death lament
Of Peleus' son, Achilles, more than thine.
Yet none is blamable; Jove evermore
With bitt'rest hate pursued Achaia's host,
And he ordain'd thy death. Hero! approach,
That thou may'st hear the words with which I seek To sooth thee; let thy long displeasure cease!
Quell all resentment in thy gen'rous breast!

I spake; nought answer'd he, but sullen join'd
His fellow ghosts; yet, still I had essay'd
To move the angry Chief to some reply,
But for the wish that in my soul I felt
To view the sad estate of others there.

There saw I Minos, offspring famed of Jove;
His golden sceptre in his hand, he sat
Judge of the dead; they pleaded each in turn;
Some stood; some sat, surrounding on his throne
The King whose ample doors are never closed.
Orion next, huge ghost, engaged my view,
Droves urging o'er the grassy mead, of beasts
Which he had slain, himself, on the wild hills,
With strong club arm'd of ever-during brass.
There also Tityus on the ground I saw Extended, offspring of the glorious earth;
Nine acres he o'erspread, and, at his side
Station'd, two vultures on his liver prey'd,
Scooping his entrails; nor his hands were free
To chase them thence; for he had fought to force
Latona, glorious concubine of Jove,
What time through pleasant Panope* she pass'd
A lonely trav'ller to the Pythian dome.
Next, suff'ring grievous torments, I beheld
Tantalus; in a pool he stood, his chin
Wash'd by the wave; thirst-parch'd he seem'd, but found Nought to assuage his thirst; for when he bow'd
His hoary head and strove to drink, the flood Vanish'd absorb'd, and, at his feet, instant
The soil appear'd, dried, by the Gods.
Tall trees, fruit-laden, with inflected heads
Stoop'd to him, pears, pomegranates, apples bright.

* A city of Phocis.—B. & C.
The luscious fig, and unctuous olive smooth;
Which when with sudden grasp he would have seized,
Winds whirl'd them high into the dusky clouds*.

There, too, the hard-task'd Sisyphus I saw,
Thrusting before him an enormous rock †.
With hands and feet struggling, he shoved the stone
Up to a hill-top; but the steep wellnigh
Vanquish'd, by some great force repulsed, the mass
Rush'd again, obstinate, down to the plain ‡.
Again, stretch'd prone, he toil'd; sweat bathed his limbs,
And thick the dust around his brows arose.

The might of Hercules I, next, survey'd;
His semblance; for himself their banquet shares
With the Immortal Gods, and in his arms
Infolds neat-footed Hebe, daughter fair
Of Jove, and of his golden-sandalled spouse.
Around him, clamorous as birds, the dead

* The offence of Tantalus was insatiable greediness; for not contented to banquet with the Gods himself, he also stole their nectar and ambrosia, and gave them to his companions.—B. & C.
† Βαραξώτα must have this sense interpreted by what follows. To attempt to make the English numbers expressive as the Greek, is a labour like that of Sisyphus. The Translator has done what he could.
‡ It is now, perhaps, impossible to ascertain with precision what Homer meant by the word κατατάς, which he uses only here, and in the next book, where it is the name of Scylla's dam.—Some understand it in this place to be an adverb only, formed in the same manner as the adverb λιξηφίς.—B. & C.

Swarm'd
Swarm'd turbulent; he, gloomy-brow'd as night,
With uncased bow and arrow on the string
Peer'd terrible from side to side, as one Ever in act to shoot, a dreadful belt
He bore athwart his bosom, thong'd with gold*.
There broider'd, many a form stupendous shone,
Bears, wild-boars, lions with fire-flashing eyes,
Fierce combats, battles, bloodshed, homicide.
The matchless artist who that belt devised
And wrought those various forms, ne'er fram'd the like Before or after. Soon as he beheld
He knew me, and in sorrow thus began.

Laertes' noble son, for wiles renown'd!
Ah, hapless Hero! thou art, doubtless, charged, Thou also, with some arduous labour, such
As in the realms of day I once endured.
Son of Saturnian Jove, I yet sustain'd
Enormous toils, subjected to a man
In worth and might inferior far to me,
For whom much arduous service I perform'd.
He even bade me on a time lead hence
The dog, that talk believing above all Impracticable; yet from Ades him
I dragg'd reluctant into light, by aid

* A thong was attached to the belt, and the sword was suspended by it.—B. & C.
Of Hermes, and of Pallas azure-eyed.

So saying, he penetrated deep again
The abode of Pluto; but I still unmoved
There flood expect ing, curious, other shades
To see of Heroes in old time deceased,
And Theseus and Pirithoüs had beheld
Famed offspring of the Gods, with other Chiefs
Of old renown, and even whom I would;
But nations countless of the shadowy Dead
Now gath’ring fast around me rent the air
With hideous outcry; me pale horror feized, Left awful Proserpine should thither send
The Gorgon-head from Aces, sight abhor’d!
Thence, therefore, hasting to the shore, I bade
My crew cast loose their moorings and embark.
Obedient they their seats on board resumed,
And down th’ Oceanus with oars we won
Our passage, first, then sann’d by pleasant gales.

* The two first lines of the following book seem to ascertain the true meaning of the conclusion of this, and to prove sufficiently that by οἰκον ἠδων, here, Homer could not possibly intend any other than a river. In those lines he tells us, in the plainest terms, that the ship left the stream of the river Oceanus, and arrived in the open sea. Dio-dorus Siculus informs us, that Ωκθνθα had been a name anciently given to the Nile.—C.
ARGUMENT

OF THE

TWELFTH BOOK.

Ulysses, pursuing his narrative, relates his return from the shades to Circe's island, the precautions given him by that Goddess, his escape from the Sirens, and from Scylla and Charybdis; his arrival in Sicily, where his companions, having slain and eaten the oxen of the Sun, are afterward shipwreck'd and lost; and concludes the whole with an account of his arrival, alone, on the mast of his vessel, at the island of Calypso.

BOOK XII.

When down the smooth Oceanus impell'd
By prosperous gales, my galley, once again, Cleaving the billows of the spacious Deep
Had reach'd th' Ææan isle, where sprightly Morn Comes dancing forth, and Phœbus first appears,
We thruft her to the sands, and, going forth,

Slept
Slept on the beach till ruddy dawn arose.
But soon as day-spring's daughter rosy-palm'd Look'd forth again, sending my friends before,
I bade them bring Elpenor's body down
From the abode of Circe to the shore.
Then, on the utmost headland of the coast
We timber fell'd, and, sorrowing o'er the dead,
Water'd his fun'r'al rites with many tears.
The dead consumed, and with the dead his arms,
We heap'd his tomb, and the sepulchral post
Erecting, fix'd his shapely oar aloft.
Thus, punctual, we perform'd; nor our return
From Ades knew not Circe, but attired
In haste, ere long arrived, with whom appear'd
Her female train with plenteous viands charged,
And bright wine rosy-red. Amidst us all Standing, the beauteous Goddess thus began.
Unhappy trav'llers, who have fought, alive,
The house of Hades, destin'd twice to die,
While all besides, once dying, die no more!
Come—take ye food; drink wine; and on the beach
All day regale, for ye shall hence again

* According to the opinion of the Scholiast, the poet means not to say that the Æan isle is the place where Aurora actually first rises, but merely to call it a land of day-light. And it seems natural that Ulysses, who had so lately left the gloomy city of the Cimmerians, should so distinguish it.—B. & C.
At day-spring o'er the Deep; but I will mark
Myself your future course, nor uninformed
Leave you in aught, left, through some dire mistake,
By sea or land new mis'ries ye incur.

The Goddess spake, whose invitation kind
We glad accepted; thus we feasting sat
Till set of sun, and quaffing richest wine;
But when the sun was set and darkness fell,
My crew beside the hawfors slept; while me
The Goddes leading by the hand apart,
First bade me sit, then, seated opposite,
Inquired, minute, of all that I had seen;
And I, from first to last, recounted all.
Then, thus the awful Goddess in return.

Thus far thy toils are finish'd. Now attend!
Hear what the Gods themselves, I know, will bring To thy remembrance in the needful hour.
First shalt thou reach the Sirens; they the hearts
Enchant of all who on their coast arrive*.
The wretch, who unforewarn'd approaching, hears

* The Sirens, according to many, were the daughters of Acheloüs and Sterope, but others call them the daughters of Acheloüs and Terriphore, one of the Muses. Choosing to live virgins they were hated by Venus, and, having wings, flew to Anthemus an island of the Tyrrhene sea. Their names were Aghophema, Theelixiopia, and Pifinoë; but Homer allows only two, mentioning them in the Dual number.—B. & C.
The Sirens' voice, his wife and little-ones
Ne'er fly to gratulate his glad return;
But him the Sirens sitting in the meads
Charm with mellifluous song, although he see Bones heap'd around them, and the mould'ring skins
Of hapless men, whose bodies have decay'd.
But, pass them thou, and, lest thy people hear
Those warblings, ere thou yet approach, with wax
Moulded-between thy palms fill all their ears;
But as for thee—thou hear them if thou wilt.
Yet let thy people, compassing around
Thy feet and arms with cordage of the ship,
Close bind thee to the socket of the mast;
So shalt thou, raptur'd, hear the Sirens' song.
But if thou supplicate to be released,
Or give such order, then, with added cords
Let thy companions bind thee still the more.
When thus thy people shall have safely pass'd
The Sirens, think not, taught by me, to learn
What course thou next shall steer; no—choose thyself
The best of two, which I shall now describe.
Here vaulted rocks impend, for ever dash'd
By the hoarse billows of the azure Deep;
The blessed Gods those rocks, Erratic, call *

* These rocks are understood to be those called the Cyanean or Symplegades from ὅμπληγας which signifies to dash together. For, standing
Not even birds can pass them; not the birds themselves which his ambrosia bear to Jove, but even of those doves the flipp'ry rock proves fatal still to one, for which the God supplies another, left the number fail. Ship never yet, arriving there, escaped, but planks and mariners are whelm'd at once, or, caught by fiery tempests, swept away. The Argo only from the Colchian shore pass'd safely, further'd by the vows of all; and even her perhaps rude winds had driv'n against those bulky rocks, but Juno's aid vouchsafed to Jason sent her safe along. These rocks are two; one lifts his summit sharp high as the spacious heav'ns, in dusky clouds enveloped, which nor autumn sees dispers'd standing at small distance from each other, to those who approached them in a right line, they appeared two, but, seen in an oblique direction, had the appearance of approximation till at last they seemed to meet. They were therefore fabulously said to clash, and were denominated the rocks of collision. For the same reason evidently it is that Homer calls them πλαγγαται or erratic.—C.

* While Jupiter was an infant a cave in Crete was his nursery, where he was attended by doves who brought him ambrosia in their bills, and by a vast eagle which supplied him in the same place with nectar. The God, having subdued and tamed the latter, assigned him an abode in heaven, and the doves he made his harbingers to announce the approach of summer and winter.—See Byzant. Mercurius cited by Barnes.—B. & C.
Nor summer, for the sun shines never there;
No mortal man, with twice ten feet supplied,
And were his hands as num'rous, might attain
Its tow'ring head, or to its base descend,
For smoothness such it shows, as if by skill
Of some nice artist polish'd all around.
Full in the centre of its western side,
Turn'd toward Erebus, a cavern yawns
Gloomy and deep; beneath it ye shall steer
Ulysses, glorious Chief! your flying bark.
No youth could fend an arrow from on board
High as its horrid mouth. There Scylla dwells,
And like a wild-beast's whelp of late renounced
By its fierce dam, with hungry whinings fills
Her deep recess, a monster to be view'd
With terror even by the Gods themselves.
Her feet are twelve, all fore-feet; six her necks
Of hideous length, each clubb'd into a head
Terrifick, arm'd with fangs in triple row,
Thick-planted, and with carnage fill'd between.
Plunged to her middle in the hollow den
She lurks, protruding from the black abyss
Her heads, with which the rav'ning monster dives
In quest of dolphins, dog-fish, or of prey
More bulky, such as in the roaring gulphs
Of Amphitrite without end abounds.
None ever boasted yet that he had pass'd
Her cavern safely, for with ev'ry mouth
She bears upcaught a mariner away *.
The other rock, Ulysses, thou shalt find Humbler, a bow-shot only from the first;
On this a wild fig grows broad-leav'd, and here
Charybdis dire ingulphs the fable flood †.
Each day the thrice disgorges, and again
Thrice drinks, insatiable, the deluge down.
Ah, fear her Then! for should thy bark approach
What time the drinks the billows, not the pow'r
Of Neptune' self could rescue thee and thine.
Steer, therefore, close to Scylla, and thy bark Urge swiftly on, since loss of six alone
Is better far than shipwreck made of all.
So Circe spake, to whom I thus replied.
Oh Goddes! tell me true. Should I escape,
Perchance, the dread Charybdis, may I strike

* The history of Scylla divested of the fable, according to Palaphatus was simply this. A three-bank'd galley belonging to an island in the Tyrrhene sea, and named Scylla, with the aid of as many ships as she could procure to assist her, plundered the coasts of Sicily and of the bay of Ionia so frequently, that she caused in those parts much talk and general consternation. Ulysses, by the help of a strong and fair wind, had the good fortune to escape when this galley chased him.—C.

† The fig-tree is mentioned here because it will soon be wanted for the preservation of the hero.—B. & C.
In their defence whom Scylla would annoy?

I said, and quick the Goddess in return.

Wretch! may no toils thy thirst of battle quell,
Nor even Pow'rs immortal move thy fear?
For such is Scylla; that enormous pest
Defies all force; retreats not; cannot die.
Defence is vain; flight is thy sole resource.*

For should'st thou linger putting on thy arms
Beside the rock, beware, left darting forth
Her num'rous heads, she seize with ev'ry mouth
A Grecian, and with others, even thee.

Pafs therefore swiftly, and aloud invoke
Crataës, mother of this plague of man,
Who will forbid her to affail thee more†.

Thou next shalt reach Thrinacia's isle; there graze
The num'rous sheep and oxen of the Sun;
Sev'n herds; as many flocks of snowy fleece;
Fifty in each; they breed not, neither die,
No shepherds them, but Goddesses attend,
Lampetia fair, and Phaëthusa, both
By nymph Næra to Hyperion borne.

* Barnes on this passage cites a punning epigram, expressive of the same sentiment; understanding Scylla as a type of Luçt.

Quid facies, facies Veneris cum veneris ante?
Ne sedeas, sed eas; ne pereas, per eas.
† Others make Scylla the daughter of Phorcys and Hecate.—B.&C.

Them,
Them, soon as she had train'd them to an age
Proportion'd to that charge, their mother sent Into Thrınacia, there to dwell and keep Inviolate their father's flocks and herds.
If, anxious for a safe return, thou spare
Those herds and flocks, though after much endured,
Ye may at last your Ithaca regain;
But should'ft thou violate them, I foretell
Destruction of thy ship and of thy crew;
And though thyself escape, thou shalt return
Late, in ill plight, with not a follower left.

She ended, and the golden morning dawn'd.
Then, all-divine, her graceful steps she turn'd
Back through the isle, and, at the beach arrived,
I summon'd all my followers, bade them cast
My vessel loose, and climb her sides again;
Obedient they embark'd, the benches fill'd,
And thresh'd with well-timed oars the foamy Deep.
And now, melodious Circe, nymph divine,
Sent after us a canvas-stretching breeze,
Pleasant companion of our course, and we (The tackle all adjusted) to the gale
Resign'd the bark, and to the pilot's care,
And, pierc'd with heart-felt sorrow, thus I said.

Oh friends! it much imports you to be taught (Not one but all) such tidings as myself

Vol. III. 2  Have
Have learn'd from Circe, prophetess divine,
That should we perish, we may perish arm'd
With like foreknowledge, both yourselves and I.
First, we must pass the Sirens singing sweet
In flow'ry meads, of whose enticing strains
She bids us all beware, and me alone
With open ears receive them; me with cords
Bind, therefore, ye, so surely to the mast
That fixt erect and moveless at its foot
I may perforce remain; and should I sue
In gentle sort, or seek with stern commands
T'obtain deliv'rance, bind me still the more.

Thus with distinct precaution I prepared
My people; rapid in her course, mean-time,
My gallant bark approach'd the Sirens' isle,
For brisk and favourable blew the wind.
Then, all at once, a breathless calm ensued,
And the waves slumber'd, lull'd by pow'r divine:
Up-sprang my people, and the folded sails
Beflowing safe below, with all their oars
Timed in just measure, swept the whitening flood.
Myself, the while, disfev'ring with my knife
A waxen cake, the num'rous portions chafed
Between my palms; erelong the ductile mass
Grew warm, obedient to that ceaseless force,
Assisted by the sun's all-piercing beam.
With that soft liniment I fill'd the ears
Of my companions, man by man, and they
My feet and arms with strong coercion bound
Of cordage to the mast-foot well secured.
Then down they sat, and, rowing, thresh'd the brine.
But when with rapid course we had arrived
Within such distance as a voice may reach,
Not unperceiv'd by them the gliding bark
Approach'd, and, thus, harmonious they began.
Achaia's boast! Ulysses! glorious Chief!
Oh hither guide thy bark, that thou may'lt hear
The Sirens' voice! these shores none ever pass'd Till happier, first, and wiser he became Lift'ning awhile to our melodious song.
For all the woes inflicted by the Gods
On Ilium's sons, and on Achaia's host,
And all events wherever else, we know *.

* The following transcript of a Latin version of this famous song by Cicero, may perhaps gratify the curious reader.

O decus Argolicum! quin puppim fleitis, Ulysses, Auribus ut nostras poeis agnoscere cantus!
Nam nemo haec unquam est transvestus cærula curfī,
Quin prius adfiterit, vocum dulcedine captus;
Post, variis avido latiatus pectore musis,
Doctior ad patrias lapsus pervenerit oras.
Nos grave certamen bellī, cladeinque tenemus
Graecia quam Trojæ divino numine vexit,
Omniaque è latis rerum refiligia terris.
So they with voices sweet their musick poured
On my delighted ear, winning with ease
My heart's desire to listen, and by signs
I bade my people, instant, set me free.
But they more strenuous row'd, and from their seats
Eurylochus and Perimedes sprang
With added cords to bind me still the more.
This danger past, and when the Sirens' voice,
Now left remote, had lost its pow'r to charm,
Then, my companions freeing from the wax
Their ears, deliver'd me from my restraint.
The island left afar, I soon discern'd
Huge waves, and smoke, and horrid thund'ring heard.
All was aghast; forth flew at once the oars
From ev'ry hand, and with a clash the waves
Smote all together; check'd, the galley stood,
By billow-sweeping oars no longer urged,
And I, throughout the vessel, man by man

To these lines of Cicero it may not be improper to add his opinion of the subject.—The Sirens, he says, seem to have arrested the passenger not only by the novelty or variety of their song, but by the knowledge they professed and promised to communicate; such as men would even cling to their rocks to hear. Homer saw plainly that to represent so great a man detained by a ditty only, would make his story incredible. The songstresses therefore offer him knowledge also, which if a man, ardently desirous of wisdom, had preferred even to his native country, it had been no wonder.

Addressing
Addressing all, encouraged thus my crew.

We meet not, now, my friends, our first distress.

This evil is not greater than we found
When the huge Cyclops in his den by force
Imprison'd us, yet even thence we 'scapeed,
My intrepidity and fertile thought
Opening the way; and we shal recollect
These dangers also, in due time, with joy.

Come, then—pursue my counsel. Ye your seats
Still occupying, smite the furrow'd flood
With well-timed strokes, that by the will of Jove
We may escape, perchance, this death, secure.

To thee the pilot thus I speak, (my words Mark thou, for at thy touch the rudder moves)
Shunning yon smoke and those tumultuous waves,
Close by this rock direct thy wary course
And fear to leave it; left the vessel slide
Into the current's force, and all be lost.

So I, with whose advice all, quick, complied.
But Scylla I as yet named not, (that woe Without a cure) left, terrified, my crew
Should all renounce their oars, and crowd below.

* Ulysses assumes to himself the honour of their deliverance from the Cyclops, not in the spirit of self-praise and vain-glory, but to confirm their confidence in him the more. For confidence in their leader is often the salvation of his followers.—C.
Juft then, forgetful of the strict command
Of Circe to forbear, I cloth’d my limbs
In radiant armour, grasp’d two quiv’ring spears,
And to the deck ascended at the prow,
Expecting earliest notice there, what time
The rock-bred Scylla should annoy my friends.
But I discern’d her not, nor could, although
To weariness of fight the dusky rock
I vigilant explored. Thus, many a groan
Heaving, we navigated sad the streight,
For here stood Scylla, while Charybdis there
With hoarse throat deep absorb’d the briny flood.
Oft as she vomited the deluge forth,
Like water cauldron’d o’er a furious fire
The whirling Deep all murmur’d, and the spray
On both those rocky summits fell in show’rs.
But when she suck’d the salt wave down again,
Then, all the pool appear’d wheeling about Within, the rock rebellow’d, and the sea
Drawn off into that gulph disclosed to view
The oozy bottom. Us pale horror seized.
Thus, dreading death, with fast-set eyes we watch’d
Charybdis; mean-time, Scylla from the bark
Caught fix away, the bravest of my friends;
And as I watching stood the galley’s course
And them within, uplifted high in air
Their legs and arms I saw. My name aloud
Pronouncing in their agony, they went,
My name, and never to pronounce it more.
As when from some bold point among the rocks
The angler, with his taper rod in hand,
Casts forth his bait to snare the smaller fry,
He swings away remote his guarded line *
Then jerks aground at once the struggling prey,
So Scylla them raised struggling to the rock,
And at her cavern's mouth devour'd them all,
Shrieking and stretching forth to me their arms
In sign of hopeless misery. Ne'er beheld
These eyes in all the seas that I have roam'd,
A sight so piteous, nor in all my toils.
These rocks thus past, Charybdis, and the den
Of dreadful Scylla, to the fruitful isle
Where graze the fatted flocks and spotless herds
Of bright Hyperion, suddenly we came.
Ere yet we reach'd the coast, the bleat of sheep
And lowings loud of oxen in the stall
Came o'er mine ear. Then dropp'd into my mind
The charge enjoin'd me by the Theban seer Tiresias, nor by Circe less enforced,
That I should leave afar with trembling awe

* They pass'd the line through a pipe of horn, to secure it against the fishes' bite.—B. & C.
The island of the all-enlivening Sun,
And to my people, sorrowing, thus I said.
   Receive, my friends, however sore distress'd,
The charge prophetick of the Theban seer
Tiresias, and by Circe much enforced,
To shun this island sacred to the God
Of all-enliv'ning day; for deadliest woes
She said, would meet us there. Ye, therefore, pass
A coast so dang'rous swiftly as ye may.
   I ceased; they me with consternation heard,
And harshly thus Eurylochus replied.
   Ulysses, ruthless Chief! no toils impair
Thy strength, of senseless iron thou art form'd,
Who thy companions weary and o'erwatch'd
Forbidd'st to disembark on this fair isle,
Where now, at last, we might with ease regale.
Thou, rash, command'st us, leaving it afar,
To roam all night the Ocean's dreary waste;
But winds to ships injurious spring by night,
And how shall we escape a dreadful death
If, chance, a sudden gust from South arise
Or stormy West, that dash in pieces oft
The vessel, even in the Gods despite?
Prepare we rather now, as night enjoins,
Our evening fare beside the fable bark,
In which at peep of day we may again

Launch
Launch forth secure into the boundless flood.

He ceas'd, whom all applauded. Then I knew
That sorrow by the will of adverse heav'n Approach'd, and in wing'd accents thus replied.

I suffer force, Eurylochus! and yield
O'er-ruled by numbers. Come, then, swear ye all
A solemn oath, that should we find an herd
Or num'rous flock, none here shall either sheep
Or bullock slay, by appetite profane
Seduced, but shall the viands eat content
Which from immortal Circe we received.

I spake; they readily a solemn oath
Sware all, and when their oath was fully sworn,
Within a creek where a fresh fountain rose.
They moor'd the bark, and, issuing, began
Brisk preparation of their evening cheer.
But when nor hunger more nor thirst remain'd
Unsated, recollecting, then, their friends
By Scylla seized and at her cave devour'd,
They mourn'd, nor ceased to mourn them, till they slept.
The night's third portion come, when now the stars,
Had travers'd the mid sky, ethereal Jove
Call'd forth a vehement wind with tempest charged,
Menacing earth and sea with pitchy clouds
Tremendous, and the night fell dark from heav'n.
But when Aurora, daughter of the day,

Look'd
Look'd rosy forth, we thrust the threaten'd ship
For safety far within a deep recess
Umbrageous, whither oft the nymphs retired
For sport and for repose, and gath'ring, there,
My gallant friends around me, thus I said.

My friends! food fails us not, but bread is yet
And wine on board. Abstain we from the herds,
Left harm ensue; for ye behold the flocks
And herds of a most potent God, the Sun!
Whose eye and watchful ear may none elude.

So saying, I sway'd the gen'rous minds of all.
A month complete the South wind ceaseless blew,
Nor other wind blew next, save East and South;
Yet they, while neither food nor rosy wine
Fail'd them, the herds harm'd not, through fear to die.
But when, at length, provision none remain'd,
Necessity, then, sent them forth to roam
In quest of prey, with pointed hooks to snare Fishes, or birds, and even what they might,
By famine urged. I solitary roam'd
Mean-time the isle and pray'd, with hope to move
Some God to show us a deliv'rance thence.
When, roving thus the isle, I had at length
Left all my crew remote, I laved my hands
Where shelter warm from ev'ry blast I found,
And supplicated all the Pow'rs above;
But they my eyes with slumber whelm'd, and thus Eurylochus seduced my crew the while.

My friends! afflicted as ye are, yet hear
A fellow-suff'r'er. Death, however caused,
Abhorrence moves in miserable man,
But death by famine is a fate of all
Most to be fear'd. Come, drive me to the shore
The best and fairest oxen of the Sun,
For sacrifice to the Immortal Pow'rs,
Resolving thus—that soon as we shall reach
Our native Ithaca, we will erect
To bright Hyperion an illustrious fane,
Which with magnificent and num'rous gifts
We will enrich. But should he choose to sink
Our vessel, for his stately beesves incensed,
And should, with him, all heav'n resent the deed,
I rather had with open mouth, at once,
Meeting the billows, perish, than by slow
And pining mis'ry in this desert isle.

So spake Eurylochus, whom all approved.
Then, driving all the fattest of the herd Few paces only, (for the sacred beesves Grazed rarely distant from the bark) they flood Encircling them around, and, grasping each
Green foliage newly pluck'd from saplings tall, (For barley none in all our bark remain'd)

Worshipp'd
Worshipp'd the Gods in pray'r*. Pray'r made, they flew
And slay'd them, and the thighs with double fat
Investing, spread them o'er with slices crude.
No wine had they with which to consecrate
The blazing rites, but with libation poor
Of water hallow'd the interior parts.
Now, when the thighs were burnt, and each had shared
His portion of the maw, and when the rest
All flash'd and scored hung roasting at the fire,
Sleep, in that moment, suddenly my eyes
Forsaking, to the shore I bent my way.
But ere the station of our bark I reach'd,
The fav'ry vapour met me. At the scent
I groan'd aloud, and to the Gods exclaim'd.

Oh Jupiter, and all ye Pow'rs above!
With cruel sleep and fatal ye have lull'd
My cares to rest, such horrible offence
Mean-time my rash companions have devised.

Then, flew long-stoled Lampetia to the Sun
At once with tidings of his slaughter'd beeves,
And he, incensed, the Immortals thus address'd.

Jove, and ye everlasting Pow'rs divine!
Avenge me instant on the crew profane

* They might encircle them either because the ceremonial required them to do so, or to confine and keep them together.—C.
Of Laertiades; Ulysses' friends
Have dared to slay my beeves, which I with joy
Beheld, both when I climb'd the starry heav'ns,
And when to earth I slop'd my "westering wheels;"
They shall requite the wrong, or I renounce
Henceforth the skies, and give the ghosts my beams.

Then, thus the Ruler of the realms of air.
Sun! shine thou still on the Immortal pow'rs,
And on the teeming earth, frail man's abode.
My candent bolts can shiver at a stroke
Their flying bark amid the billowy Deep.

These things Calypso, taught them, as she said,
Herself by Mercury, made known to me.

But when, descending to the shore, I reach'd
At length my bark, with look and tone severe
I reprimanded them, yet no redress
Could frame, or remedy — the beeves were dead.
Soon follow'd signs portentous sent from heav'n.
The skins all crept, and on the spits the flesh
But crude and roasted, moan'd as with the voice
Of living beeves. Thus my devoted friends
Driving the fattest oxen of the Sun,
Feasted six days entire; but when the sev'nth
By mandate of Saturnian Jove appeared,
The storm then ceased to rage, and we, again
Embarking, launch'd our galley, reared the mast,
And gave our unfurl'd canvas to the wind.

The island left afar, and other land
Appearing none, but sky alone and sea,
Right o'er the hollow bark Saturnian Jove
A blue cloud station'd, dark'ning all the Deep.
Not long my vessel ran, for, blowing wild,
Now came shrill Zephyrus; a stormy gust
Snapp'd sheer the shrouds on both sides; backward fell
The mast, and with loose tackle strew'd the hold;
Sriking the pilot in the stern, it crush'd
His scull together; he a diver's plunge
Made downward, and his noble spirit fled.
Then Jove, still thund'ring, hurl'd into the ship
His candent bolts; she, quaking all her length,
With sulphur reek'd, and o'er her shatter'd sides
My people, plunging, on the boist'rous waves
Like sea-mews rode, forbidden by that stroke
Of wrath divine to hope their country more.
But I, the vessel still paced to and fro,
Till sever'd by the storm her planks and ribs
Forsook the keel now left to float alone.
Snapp'd where it join'd the keel the mast had fall'n,
But fell encircled with a leathern brace,
Which it retain'd; binding with this the mast
And keel together, on them both I sat,
Borne helpless onward by the dreadful gale.

And
And now the West subsided, and the South
Arose instead, with mis’ry charged for me,
That I might measure back my course again
To dire Charybdis. All night long I drove,
And when the sun arose, at Scylla’s rock
Once more, and at Charybdis’ gulph arrived.
It was the fearful time when she absor’d
The briny flood, but by a wave upborne
I seized the branches of the wild-fig fast*,
To which, bat-like, I clung; yet where to fix
My foot secure found not, or where to ascend,
For distant lay the roots, and distant shot
The largest arms erect into the air,
O’er-shadowing all Charybdis; therefore hard
I clench’d the boughs, till she disgorg’d again
Both keel and mast. Not undesire by me
They came, though late; for at what hour the judge,
After decision made of num’rous strifes
Between young candidates for honour, leaves
The forum for refreshment’ sake at home,
Then was it that the mast and keel emerged†.
Deliver’d to a voluntary fall,
Fast by those beams I dash’d into the flood,

* See line 120.
† He had therefore held by the fig-tree from sun-rise till afternoon.
And seated on them both, with oary palms
Impell'd them; nor the Sire of Gods and men
Permitted Scylla to discern me more,
Else, in that moment, had I surely died.*
Nine days I floated, and the Gods, at length,
On the tenth night, the beams which I beftrode
Drove to Ogygia, where the beauteous Nymph
Calypso dwells; she pitied and supplied
My want of all things.—But let this suffice.
Whate'er ensued, thy royal spouse and thou
Learn'd yesterday; and, to rehearse a tale
So lately told, were wearisome and vain†.

* Strabo contends that Circe misinformed Ulysses; for she assured him that if he arrived at Charybdis at the time when she ingulphed the water, Neptune himself could not deliver him. He arrives there, however, at that very time, and nevertheless escapes. But Circe gave him that caution, on a supposition that if he arrived there at all it must be in his ship, and his escape by means of the wild fig when the timbers on which he had floated thither were actually swallowed up, is no impeachment of the truth of her intelligence.—C.

† Hence it is plain, says Eustathius, that none of Homer's repetitions are made without a reason, or escape him through mere garrulity. And Plutarch says, observing on this passage, Of all that can be said of poets nothing is so true as that Homer alone, always new, always beautiful, may bid defiance to the most fastidious reader. Leading us, as he does, from subject to subject he never cloys, but is sure to present some novelty or other to our relief before satiety can seize us —C.